13. To keep together.

Weak women should, in danger, herd like deer. Dryden.

HER

It is the nature of indigency, like common danger, to en-dear men to one another, and make them herd together, like fellow-sailors in a storm. Norris.

2. To associate.

I'll herd among his friends, and seem

One of the number. Addison's Cat.

Run to towns, to herd with knaves and fools,

And undistinguish'd pass among the crowd. Walsh.

TO HERD, v. a. To throw or put into an herd.

The rest,

However great we are, honest and valiant,

Are herded with the vulgar. Ben. Jonson's Catiline.

HERDROOM, n. f. [herd and room.] A keeper of herds.

But who shall judge the wager won or lost?

That shall you'd herdroom, and none other, Spenser.

Which over the posse hitherward doth post.

HERDMAN, n. f. [herd and man.] One employed in tend-

HERDSMAN, n. f. [herd and man.] One employed in tend-

A herdsman rich, of much account was he,

In whom no evil did reign, or good appear. Sidney.

And you, enchantment,

Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou

These rural latches to his entrance open,

I will devise a death cruel for thee. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

Scarce themselves know how to hold

A sheephook, or have learn'd ought else the least

That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs. Milton.

There oft the Indian herdsman, humming beat,

Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds

At loop-holes cut through thick-set shade. Milt. Par. Lost.

So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear

Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden.

The herdsman, round

The cheerful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd.

When their herdsman could not agree, they parted by con-

HERE, adv. [heer, Saxon; hier, Dutch.]

Her farthest verge. Milton.

How wretched does Prometheus' state appear,

While he his second misery suffers here!

To-day is ours, we have it here. Cowley.

2. In the present state.

Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy hereafter.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

3. It is used in making an offer or attempt.

Then here's for earnest:

'Tis finish'd, and the dusk that yet remains

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgment, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and dissoluity. King Charles.

HERESIARCH. n. f. [heresiarchus, French; ἡρεσιάρχης and ἡρεσιάρχης.] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of heretics.

The pope declared him not only an heretic, but an heresiarch. Stillington.

HERETICK. n. f. [heretique, Fr. ἡρετικός.] One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholic church. I rather will suspect the sun with cold Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands, In him that was of late an heretic, As firm as faith. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretic or schismatic be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

No heretics desire to spread Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Davies.

Bellarmin owns, that he has quoted a heretic instead of a father. Baker on Learning.

When a Papist uses the word heretics, he generally means Protestants; when a Protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentiously obstinate in fundamental errors. Wat's Legick.

HERETICAL. adj. [from heretic.] Containing heresy. How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be, as touching his own personal persuasion, heretical, who in their opinion not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hooker, b. iii. f. 1.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning. Decay of Piety.

HERETICALLY. adv. [from heretical.] With heresy.

HERETO. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.

HERPES. n. f. [ἑρπης.] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds: miliaris, or pityriasis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and exedens, which is more corollive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers, if not timely taken care of. Quincy.

A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and, if the accels of acrimony be very great, it maketh an herpes exedens. Wigman's Surgery.

HERRING. n. f. [hereng, French; hering, Saxon.] A small sea-fish. The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, hering, mackerel, and cod. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Buy my hering fresh. Swift.

HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is her house, this house is hers.

How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears; If so, my eyes are other wash'd than hers. Shakespeare.

Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers; For all the miserable are made hers. Waller.

I see her rowling eyes; And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries; With words not hers, and more than human sound, She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Rowe's Virg. Georg. b. iv.

HERSE. n. f. [herfua, low Latin; supposed to come from herpan, to praise.]

1. A temporary monument raised over a grave. Partiality

HET

2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave. When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' herse, Who does not weep that reads the moving verse? Kelcom.

Crowds of dead in decent pomp are born; Their friends attend the herse, the next relations mourn. Dryden's Virgil's Georg. b. iv.

On all the line a sudden vengeance waits, And frequent herfes shall besiege your gates. Pope.

To HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into an herse. I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would she were herse'd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.

The Grecians spitefully drew from the darts the corse, And herse'd it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman's Iliad.

The house is herse'd about with a black wood, Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree: Each flower's a pregnant poison, try'd and good; Each herb a plague. Craftery.

HERSELF. pronoun. The female personal pronoun, in the oblique cases reciprocal. The jealous o'er worn widow and herself, Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen, Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The more she looks, the more her fears increase, At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryden.

HERSELIKE. adj. [herse and like.] Funereal; suitable to funerals. Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herselike airs as carols. Bacon.

To HERSE. v. a. [Hebrew, Saxon, to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use. Thenot, now is the time of merry-making, Nor Pan to herse, nor with love to play; Like mirth in May is meetest for to make, Or Summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser's Past.

Thenceforth it firmly was established, And for Apollo's honour highly herse'd. Fairy Queen.

But were thy years green as now be mine, Then wouldst thou learn to carol of love, And herse with hymns thy lass's glove. Spenser.

HERSTANCY. n. f. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspense. The reason of my hesitancy about the air is, that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which float into crystals exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopp'd. Boyle.

Some of them reasoned without doubt or hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to show that they believed their own reasonings. Athenbury's Sermons.

To HERSITATE. v. a. [hesite, Latin; hesiter, French.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty. A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Grecians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Broom's Notes on the Iliad.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike, Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike; Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend, A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HERSITATION. n. f. [from hesitate.] 1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made. I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each person. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Intermission of speech; want of volubility. Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HERST. n. f. [herst, Saxon.] Command; precept; injunction. If thou be the most kind preserver Of living wights, the sovereign lord of all, How falls it then, that, with thy furious fervour, Thou dost afflict the not deserver, As him that doth thy lovely best despise. Spenser.

Thou wast a spirit too delicate To act her earthy and abhor'd commands, Refusing her grand best. Shakespeare's Tempest.

HETEROCLITE. n. f. [heteroclite, Fr. heteroclitum, Latin; ἑτερόκλητος; and κλίσις.]

HETEROGENEOUS. adj. [heteros and genes.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature.

I have with great care observed the condition of such heterogeneous bodies, which I found immersed and included in the mass of this fluidness. Woodward.
HETEROGENEOUS. n. f. [heteros and genes.] Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the Tropic fall at noon always to the North.
 To HEW. v. a. part. hewn or hewed. [hayan, Saxon; hauwen, Dutch.]

1. To cut with an edged instrument; to hack.
 Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
 And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain. Spenfer.
 I had purpose
 Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
 Or lose my arm for't. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends. Hayward.
 One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured. Playw.
 2. To chop; to cut.

Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:
 Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint. Shakep.
 He from deep wells with engines water drew,
 And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew. Dryd. Fables.
 3. To fell, as with an axe.

He that depends
 Upon your favours, twins with fins of lead,
 And hews down oaks with rufhes. Shakep. Coriolanus.
 Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
 Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
 Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night. Shakep. H. VI.
 Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
 And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.
 He from the mountain hewing timber tall,
 Began to build a vessel of huge bulk. Milton's Parad. Lost.
 We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
 And hew down all that would oppose our passage. Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe.
 Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that hewed him out a sepulchre on high. J. xxii. 16.
 Nor is it to proper to hew out religious reformations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations. K. Ch.
 This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks. Addison on Italy.
 Next unto bricks are preferred the square hewn stone. Mort.

5. To form laboriously.
 The gate was adamant; eternal frame!
 Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
 The labour of a god. Dryden's Fables.
 I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than hewing out new. Pope to Swift.
HEWER. n. f. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourcore thousand hewers in the mountains. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HEXAGON. n. f. [hexagone, French; hex and gonia.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.
HEXAGONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal. Ray on the Creation.
HEXAGONY. n. f. [from hexagon.] A figure of six angles.
HEXAGONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six angles.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagones, or sexangular cells of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians? Bramb. against Hobbs.
HEXAMETER. n. f. [hex and metron.] A verse of six feet.
 The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English hexameter. Dryden.

HEXAPOD. n. f. [hex and pod.] An animal with six feet.
 I take those to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come; for that sort of hexapods are eaten in America. Ray on the Creation.
HEXASTICK. n. f. [hex and stick.] A poem of six lines.
HEV. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation; the contrary to the Latin hei.
 Shadwell from the town retires,
 To bless the wood with peaceful lyric;
 Then hey for praise and panegyric. Prior.
HEYDAY. interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolic and exultation, and sometimes of wonder.
 I thought say anon he is some kin to thee,
 Thou spend'st such heyday wit in praising him. Shakespeare.
 'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
 Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday! Hudibras, p. i.
HEYDAY. n. f. A frolic; mirthfulness.
 At your age
 The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
 And waits upon the judgment. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
HEYDEGIVES. n. f. A wild frolic dance.
 But friendly fairies met with many graces,
 And light-foot nymphs can chase the ling'ring night
 With heydegives, and trimly trodden traces. Spenfer.
HIA'TION. n. f. [from hia, Latin.] The act of gaping.
 Men observing the continual hiations, or holding open its mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the alment of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HIA'TUS. n. f. [hiatus, Latin.] 1. An aperture; a breach.
 Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below open into and communicates with it. Woodward.
 2. The opening of the month by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.
 The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the found than the hiatus itself. Pope.
HIERNAL. adj. [hiernus, Latin.] Belonging to the Winter.
 This star should rather manifest its warming power in the Winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hiernal conversion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HICCIUS DOCCIUS. n. f. [corrupted, I fancy, from hic et illic, this or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.
 An old dull sot, who told the clock
 For many years at Bridewell dock,
 At Wellminster and Hicks's halls,
 And hiccius doccius play'd it in all;
 Where, in all governments and times,
 H' had been both friend and foe to crimes. Hudibras, p. iii.
HICCOUGH. n. f. [hicken, Danish.] A convulsion of the stomach producing fobs.
 So by an abbey's skeleton of late
 I heard an echo supererogate
 Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
 As if she had the hicough o'er and o'er. Cleveland.
 Sneezing cureth the hicough, and is profitable unto women in hard labour. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 If the stomach be hurt, singultus or hicough follows, with vomiting and nausea. Wise's Surgery.

HID

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff.
 Nile hears him knocking at his sev'nfold gates,
 And feels his hidden springs, and fears his nephews fates. Dr.
 Thus the fire of gods and men below:
 What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.
 The sev'nal parts lay hidden in the piece;
 Th' occasion but exerted that, or this. Dryden.
 Then for my corps a homely grave provide,
 Which love and me from public scorn may hide. Dryden.
 Seas hid with navies, chariots passing o'er
 The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore. Dryden.
 With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted sources of perfection? Addison.
 The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himself under a greater variety of shapes. Addison.
 Hell trembles at the sight, and hides its head
 In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart
 Is filled with peace. Rousseau's Royal Convert.
 To HIDE. v. n. To lye hid; to be concealed.
 A fox, that had been hard run, begged of a countryman, at work in a wood, to help him to some hiding place. L'Estrange.
 Our bolder talents in full view display'd;
 Your virtues open fairest in the shade:
 Bred to disguise, in publick 'tis you hides,
 Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride,
 Weakness or delicacy. Pope.
 HIDE and SEEK. n. f. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.
 The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide

HIE

This, in the present application, is hideously profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier's Defence.
HIDIOUSNESS. n. f. [from hideous.] Horribleness; dreadful-ness; terrour.
HIDER. n. f. [from the verb.] He that hides.
 To HIE. v. n. [hiezan, Saxon.] 1. To hasten; to go in haste.
 When they had mark'd the changed skies,
 They wist their hour was spent; then each to rest him hies.
Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 21
 In a fair moon-shine night thither he hies to dig it up.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

My will is even this, Shakespeare.
 That presently you hie you home to bed.
 Well, I will hie,
 And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Shak. Ju. Cæs.
 Some to the woods, or whither fear advis'd;
 But running from, all to destruction hie. Daniel's Civ. War.
 The snake no sooner hie'd,
 But virtue heard it, and away he hied. Crashaw.
 Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge, Accurs'd, and in a cursed hour, he hies. Milt. Parad. Lost.
 Thus he advis'd me, on yon aged tree
 Hang up thy lute, and hie thee to the sca. Waller.
 The youth, returning to his mistress, hies. Dryden.
 2. It was anciently used with the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.
 Auster spy'd him;
 Cruel Auster thither hied him. Crashaw.
HIERARCH. n. f. [hieros and archos; hierarches, Fr.] The chief of a sacred order.
 Angels, by imperial summons call'd,
 Forthwith from all the ends of heav'n appear'd,
 Under their hierarchs in orders bright. Milt. Parad. Lost.
HIERARCHICAL. adj. [hierarchique, French; from hierarch.] Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.
HIERARCHY. n. f. [hierarchie, French, from hierarch.] 1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings:
 Out of the hierarchies of angels descend,
 The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the east. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
 In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
 Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
 A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.
 These the supreme king
 Exalted to such pow'r, and gave to rule,
 Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Jehovah, from the summit of the sky,
 Environ'd with his winged hierarchy,
 The world survey'd. Sandys.
 The blessedest of mortal wights, now questionless the highest saint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so importuned, that a great part of the divine liturgy was addressed solely to her. Hewel's Vocal Perfection.
 2. Ecclesiastical establishment.
 The presbytery had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.
 While the old levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices. South.

 9. Severe; oppressive.
 When there appeareth on either side an high hand, violent prosecution, cunning advantages taken, and combination, then is the virtue of a judge seen.
 10. Noble; illustrious.
 Trust me, I am exceeding weary.
 —Is it come to that? I had thought, weariness durst not have attacked high blood.—It doth me, though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it.
 He woos both high and low, both rich and poor.
 11. Violent; tempestuous; loud.
 More ships in calms on a deceitful coast,
 Or unseen rocks, than in high storms are lost.
 Spiders cannot easily weave their nets in a high wind.
 At length the winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;
 Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up
 In its full fury.
 12. Tumultuous; turbulent; ungovernable.
 Not only tears
 Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds worse within,
 Began to rise; high passions, anger,
 Mistrust, suspicion, discord, hate, took fore
 Their inward state of mind.
 Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show,
 Or exercise their spite in human woe?
 13. Full; complete.

HIG

 Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high,
 With adamant columns threatens the sky.
HIGH-BLEST. adj. Supremely happy.
 The good which we enjoy from heav'n descends;
 But that from us ought to ascend to heav'n
 So prevalent, as to concern the mind
 Of God high-bless'd, or to incline his will,
 Hard to belief may seem.
HIGH-BLOWN. Swelled much with wind; much inflated.
 I have ventur'd,
 Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
 These many summers on a sea of glory;
 But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride
 At length broke under me, and now has left me
 Weary, and old with service, to the mercy
 Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.
HIGH-BORN. Of noble extraction.
 Cast round your eyes
 Upon the high-born beauties of the court;
 There chuse some worthy partner of your heart.
HIGH-BUILT. adj.

 Most royal majesty,
 I crave no more than that your highness offer'd.
 How long in vain had nature striv'd to frame
 A perfect prince, ere her highness came?
 Beauty and greatness are eminently joined in your royal highness.
 Dignity of nature; supremacy.
 Destruction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his highness I could not endure.
HIGHT. [This is an imperfect verb, used only in the preterite tense with a passive signification: patan, to call, Saxon; hills, to be called, German.]

HIL

 1. Was named; was called.
 The city of the great king high it well,
 Wherein eternal peace and happiness doth dwell.
 Within this homestead liv'd, without a peer
 For crowing loud, the noble Chanticleer,
 So high her cock.
 2. It is sometimes used as a participle passive, and signifies called; named. It is now obsolete, except in burlesque writings.
 Amongst the rest a good old woman was,
 High mother Hubbard.
HIGHWAY. n. f. [high and way.] The utmost flow of the tide.
 They have a good way in Essex of draining of lands that lie below the highway, and that are something above the low-water mark.
HIGHWAY. n. f. [high and way.] Great road; publick path.
 So few there be
 That chuse the narrow path, or seek the right:
 All keep the broad highway, and take delight
 With many rather for to go astray.
 Two inscriptions give a great light to the histories of Appian, who made the highway, and of Fabius the dictator.
 Ent'ring on a broad highway,
 Where power and titles scatter'd lay,
 He strove to pick up all he found.
 I could mention more trades we have lost, and are in the highway to lose.
HIGHWAYMAN. n. f. [highway and man.] A robber that plunders on the publick roads.
 'Tis like the friendship of pickpockets and highwaymen, that observe strict justice among themselves.
 A remedy like that of giving my money to an highwayman before he attempts to take it by force, to prevent the sin of robbery.
HIGLAPER. n. f. An herb.
HILARITY. n. f. [hilaritas, Latin.] Merriment; gaiety.
 Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalescence from wine.
HILD. in Elrick's grammar, is interpreted a lord or lady: so Hildebert is a noble lord; Mabilda, an heroic lady; and in the same sense is Wiga also found.
HILDING. n. f. [Saxon; signifies a lord: perhaps hilding means originally a little lord in contempt, for a man that has only the delicacy or bad qualities of high rank; or a term of reproach abbreviated from hinderling, degenerate.]
 1. A sorry, paltry, cowardly fellow.
 He was some hilding fellow, that had stol'n
 The horse he rode on.
 If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect.
 You are curb'd from that enlargement by
 The consequence of th' crown, and must not foil
 The precious note of it with a base slave,
 A hilding for a livery, a squire's cloth.
 This idle toy, this hilding scorn my power,
 And sets us all at naught.
 2. It is used likewise for a mean woman.
 Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;
 Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots.
HILL. n. f. [Saxon.] An elevation of ground less than a mountain.
 My sheep are thoughts, which I both guide and serve;
 Their pasture is fair hills of fruitless love.
 Jerusalem is seated on two hills,
 Of height unlike, and turned side to side.
 Three fides are sure imbar'd with crags and hills,
 The rest is easy, scant to rise elpy'd,
 But mighty bulkworks fence the plainer part:
 So art helps nature, nature strengtheneth art.
 When our eye some prospect would pursue,
 Defending from a hill, looks round to view.
 A hill is nothing but the nest of some metal or mineral, which, by a plattick virtue, and the efficacy of subterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their substance, do increase and grow.
HILLLOCK. n. f. [from hill.] A little hill.
 Yet weigh this, alas! great is not great to the greater:
 What, judge you, doth a hilllock show by the lofty Olympus!
 Sometime walking not unseen
 By hedge-row elms, on hilllocks green.
 This mountain, and a few neighbouring hilllocks that lie scattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of these dominions.
HILLY. adj. [from hill.] Full of hills; unequal in the surface.
 Towards the hilly corners of Druina remain yet her very Aborigenes, fatally thrust amongst an assembly of mountains.

HIN

- Climbing to a hilly steep,
He views his herds in vales afar. Dryden.
- Lo! how the Norick plains
Rife hills, with large piles of slaughter'd knights. Philips.
Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, tho' aman would chuse to travel through a plain one. Addison.
- HILT*. n. f. [Dit, Saxon, from heilan, to hold.] The handle of any thing, particularly of a sword.
- Now fits expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial; crowns and coronets, Promis'd to Harry and his followers. Shaksp. Henry V.
- Take thou the hilt,
And when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword. Shaksp. Julius Caesar.
Be his this sword, whose blade of brads displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt, a silver blaze. Pope's Odyssey.
- HIM*. [him, Saxon.]
1. The oblique case of he.
Me he refored unto my office, and him he hanged. Gen. xli.
2. Him was anciently used for it in a neutral sense.
HIMSELF. pron. [him and self.]
1. In the nominative the same as he, only more emphatical.
It was a daring speech of the ancients to say, that a friend is another himself, for that a friend is far more than himself. Bacon.
- With flame remembers, while himself was one
Of the same herd, himself the same had done. Denham.
2. In ancient authors it is used neutrally for itself.
She is advanc'd
Above the clouds as high as heav'n himself. Shaksp.peare.
3. In the oblique cases it has a reciprocal signification.
I perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set awork by a reprovable badness in himself. Shaksp. K. Lear.
4. It is sometimes not reciprocal.
Nothing in nature can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy. South.
- HIN*. n. f. [הין, A measure of liquids among Jews, containing about ten pints.]
- With the one lamb a tenth deal of flour, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil. Ex. xxix. 40.
- HIND*. adj. compar. hind; superl. hindmost. [hynan, Saxon.] Backward; contrary in position to the face: as, hind legs. See HINDER and HINDMOST.
- Bringing its tail to its head, it bends its back so far 'till its head comes to touch its hind part, and so with its armour gathers itself into a ball. Ray on the Creation.
- The stag
Hears his own feet, and thinks they found like more,
And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore. Pope.
- HIND*. n. f. [hynse, Saxon, from hinnus, Latin.]
1. The tie to a stag; the female of red deer.
How he flew, with glancing dart amiss,
A gentle hind, the which the lovely boy
Did love as life. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Can't thou mark when the hinds do calve? Job xxxix. 1.
Nor Hercules more lands or labours knew,
Not though the brazen-footed hind he flew. Dryden's Æn.
2. [hine, Saxon.] A servant.
A couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their mistresses, to carry me in the name of foul cloaths to Datches-lane. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
3. [hincman, Saxon.] A peasant; a boor; a mean rustick.
The Dutch, who came like greedy hinds before,
To reap the harvest their ripe ears did yield,
Now look like thofe, when rolling thunders roar,
And fleets of lightning blast the standing field. Dryden.
He cloth'd himself in coarse array,
A lab'ring hind in fiew. Dryden's Fables.
- HINDER*. n. f. The same as raspberries. Ainsworth.
TO HINDER. v. a. [hinderian, Saxon.] To obstruct; to stop;
to let; to impede.
Hinder me not, seeing the Lord hath prospered my way.
Gen. xxiv. 56.
- The whole world shined with clear light, and none were hindered in their labour. Wisd. xvii. 20.
You minims of hindring knot-grafs made;
You beady, you acorn. Shaksp. Midl. Night's Dream.
If the alms were hindered only by intreaty, the hinderer is not tied to restitution, because intreaty took not liberty away from the giver. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.
This objection hinders not but that the heroic action of some commander, enterprised for the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be written. Dryden's Juv. Dedicat.
What hinders younger brothers, being fathers of families, from having the same right? Lodge.
- HINDER*. adj. [from hind.] That which is in a position contrary to that of the face.

HIN

- These beasts, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet, and so this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement. Sidney, b. i.
- As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back. Addison's Guardian.
- HINDERANCE*. n. f. [from hinder.] Impediment; let; stop; obstruction.
- False opinions, touching the will of God to have things done, are wont to bring forth mighty and violent practices against the hinderance of them, and those practices new opinions more pernicious than the first; yea, most extremely sometimes opposite to the first. Hooker's Preface.
- They must be in every Christian church the same, except mere impossibility of so having it be the hinderance. Hooker.
What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of what is well done? Dryden's Dufesnop.
- Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.
He must conquer all these difficulties, and remove all these hinderances out of the way that leads to justice. Atterbury.
- HINDERER*. n. f. [from hinder.] He or that which hinders or obstructs.
- Brakes, great hinderers of all plowing, grow. May.
HINDERLING. n. f. [from hind or hinder.] A paltry, worthless, degenerate animal.
- HINDERMOST*. adj. [This word seems to be less proper than hindmost.] Hindmost; last; in the rear.
He put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindmost. Gen.
Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,
And leave you hindmost. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
- HINDMOST*. adj. [hind and most.] The last; the lag; that which comes in the rear.
'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man, Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now. Shaksp. H.V.
He met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind. Deut. xxv. 18.
- Let him retire, betwixt two ages cast,
The first of this, and hindmost of the last,
A losing gambler. Dryden's Aurengze. Persique.
- The race by vigour, not by vanity is won;
So take the hindmost, hell—he said, and run. Pope.
- HINGE*. n. f. [or hingle, from hangle or hang.]
1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.
At the gate
Of heav'n arriv'd, the gate self-open'd wide,
On golden hinges turning. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
Then from the hinge their strokes the gates divorce,
And where the way they cannot find, they force. Denham.
Heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high;
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd. Dryden's Æn.
2. The cardinal points of the world, East, West, North, and South.
If when the moon is in the hinge at East,
The birth breaks forward from its native rest;
Full eighty years, if you two years abate,
This station gives. Creech's Mantua.
And these being hinges of the world, create
New powers in stars. Creech's Mantua.
3. A governing rule or principle.
The other hinge of punishment might turn upon a law, whereby all men, who did not marry by the age of five and twenty, should pay the third part of their revenue. Temple.
4. To be off the HINGES. To be in a state of irregularity and disorder.
The man's spirit is out of order and off the hinges; and 'till that be put into its right frame, he will be perpetually disquieted. Willson, Sermons 4.
- TO HINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish with hinges.
2. To bend as an hinge.
Be thou a flatterer now, and hinge thy knee;
And let his very breath, whom thou'lt observe,
Blow off thy cap. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
- TO HINT. v. a. [enter, French. Skinner.] To bring to mind by a slight mention or remote allusion; to mention imperfectly.
Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike. Pope.
In waking whispers, and repeated dreams,
To hint pure thoughts, and warn the favour'd soul. Thomson.
- TO HINT. at. To allude to; to touch slightly upon.
Speaking of Augustus's actions, he still remembers that agriculture ought to be some way hinted at throughout the whole poem. Addison on the Georgicks.
- HINT*. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Faint notice given to the mind; remote allusion; distant in-sinnuation.

HIR

- Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations, the first hints and whispers of good and evil, that pass in his heart. South's Sermons.
2. Suggestion; intimation.
On this hint I spake,
She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd. Shaksp. Othello.
Actions are so full of circumstances, that, as men observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put different interpretations on them. Addison's Spectator.
- HIP*. n. f. [hype, Saxon.]
1. The joint of the thigh; the fleshy part of the thigh.
How now, which of your hips has the most profound sciatica. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
Hippocrates affirmeth of the Scythians, that, using continual riding, they were generally molested with the sciatica, or hip gout. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
- So shepherds use
To set the same mark on the hip
Both of their found and rotten sheep. Hudibras, p. ii.
Against a stump his tuft the monster grinds. Dryden.
And ranch'd his hips with one continu'd wound.
2. To have on the hip. [A low phrase.] To have an advantage over another. It seems to be taken from hunting, the hip or haunch of a deer being the part commonly seized by the dogs.
If this poor brach of Venice, whom I cherish
For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,
I'll have our Michael Caffio on the hip. Shaksp. Othello.
- HIP*. n. f. [from hepa, Saxon.] The fruit of the birch or the dogrose.
Eating hips and drinking watry foam. Hubbard's Tale.
Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;
The oaks bear masts, the birars scarlet hips. Shaksp.peare.
Years of store of haws and hips do commonly portend cold Winters. Bacon's Natural History.
- TO HIP. v. a. [from hip.]
1. To sprain or shoot the hip.
His horse was hip'd with an old motly saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.
2. HIP-HOP. A cant word formed by the reduplication of hop.
Your different tastes divide our poets cares;
One foot the sock, 't'other the buskin wears:
Thus while he strives to please, he's forc'd to do't,
Like Volcuius hip-hop in a single boot. Congreve.
- HIP*. interj. An exclamation, or calling to one; the same as the Latin ehi, heu! Ainsworth.
- HIP*. adj. A corruption of hippochondriack. Ainsworth.
- HIPPOCENTAUR*. n. f. [ἵππος, hippos; κένταυρος, hippocentaurus, French.]
A fabulous monster, half horse and half man.
How are poetical fictions, how are *hippocentaur*s and chimeras to be imag'd, which are things quite out of nature, and whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.
- HIPPOCRASS*. n. f. [ἵππος, hippos; κρασι, quasi vinum Hippocratis.]
A medicated wine.

you were hipshot? says the goosie to the gollie. L'Estrange.
- HIPSWORT*. n. f. [hip and wort.] A plant. Ainsworth.
- TO HIRE. v. a. [hynan, Saxon.]
1. To procure any thing for temporary use at a certain price.
His fardel avarice rakes
In excrements, and hires the jakes. Dryden's Juvenal.
2. To engage a man to temporary service for wages.
They weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith, and he maketh it a god. Is. xlvii. 6.
I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their slaves. Shaksp. Macbeth.
3. To bribe.
Themetes first, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,
Or so the Trojan destiny requir'd,
Mov'd that the ramparts might be broken down. Dryd. Æn.
4. To engage himself for pay.
They that were full, hir'd out themselves for bread; and they that were hungry, ceased. 1 Sa. ii. 5.
- HIRE*. n. f. [hype, Saxon.]
1. Reward or recompence paid for the use of any thing.
2. Wages paid for service.
Great thanks and goodly meed to that good fire;
He thence departing gave for his pains hire. Fairy Queen.

HIS

- I have five hundred crowns,
The thrifty hire I fav'd under your father. Shaksp.peare.
Though little was their hire, and light their gain,
Yet somewhat to their share he threw. Dryden.
All arts and artists Thebes could command,
Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame. Dryden.
- HIRELING*. n. f. [from hire.]
1. One who serves for wages.
The hireling longs to see the shades ascend,
That with the tedious day his toil might end,
And he his pay receive. Sandys.
In the framing of Hiero's ship there were three hundred carpenters employed for a year, besides many other hirelings for carriages. Wilkins's Dædalus.
2. A mercenary; a prostitute.
Tis frequent here to see a freshborn fon
On the left hand of a rich hireling run. Dryd. Juvenal.
- Now the shades thy evening walk with bays,
No hireling the, no prostitute to praise. Pope.
HIRELING. adj. Serving for hire; venal; mercenary; doing what is done for money.
Then trumpets, torches, and a tedious crew
Of hireling mourners for his funeral due. Dryd. Pers. Sat.
- HIRE*. n. f. [from hire.]
1. One who uses any thing paying a recompence; one who employs others paying wages.
2. In Scotland it denotes one who keeps small horses to let.
HIRE. adj. [hire, Latin.] Rough; rugged.
There are bulbous, fibrous, and hire roots: the hire is a middle sort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that, besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round. Bacon's Natural History.
- HIS*. pronoun possessive. [hys, Saxon.]
1. The masculine possessive. Belonging to him that was before mentioned.
England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulph. Shaksp. Henry V.
If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion. Shak. Macb.
Heav'n and yourself
Had part in this fair maid; now heaven hath all,
And all the better is it for the maid;
Your part in her you could not keep from death;
But heav'n keeps his part in eternal life. Shak. Re. and Jul.
If our father carry authority with such disposition as he bears this last surrender of his, it will but offend us. Shaksp.
He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak in the wood, has appropriated them to himself: nobody can deny but the nourishment is his. Locke.
Whence'er I stoop, he offers at a kiss;
And when my arms I stretch, he stretches his. Addis. Ovid.
2. It was anciently used in a neutral sense, where we now say it.
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shaksp. Macbeth.
Not the dreadful spout,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
There's not the smallest orb, which thou beholdest,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims. Shaksp.peare.
This rule is not so general, but that it admitteth his exceptions. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Opium loseth some of his poisonous quality, if it be va-poured out, mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.
3. It is sometimes used as a sign of the genitive case: as, the man his ground, for the man's ground.
Where is this mankind now? who lives to age
Fit to be made Methusalem his page? Donne.
By thy fond comfort, by thy father's cares,
By young Telemachus his blooming years. Pope's Odyssey.
4. It is sometimes used in opposition to this man's.
Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands,
Desire his jewels, and this other's house. Shaksp. Macbeth.
5. Anciently before self.
Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him. Sidney.
TO HIS. v. n. [hissen, Dutch.] To utter a noise like that of a serpent and some other animals. It is remarkable, that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noise which it signifies.
In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames, and cool'd glowing hot, in that surge, like a horsehoe; think of that; hissing hot. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
The merchants shall hiss at thee. Ezek. xxvii. 26.
See the furies arise:
See the snakes that they rear,
How they hiss in their hair. Dryden's Alexander's Feast.
Against the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.
TO

HIS

To HIS. v. a. [hyscean, Saxon.]

1. To condemn by hissing; to explode.
Every one will hiss him out to his disgrace. Ecluf. xxii. 1.
Men shall pursue with merited disgrace;
Hiss, clap their hands, and from his country chase. Sandys.
She would so shamefully fail in the last act, that, instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hissed off the stage. Mors.
I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off, and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.
Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hissed out of all the courts as ridiculous? Collier on Duelling.
2. To procure hisses or disgrace.
Thy mother plays, and I
Play too; but so disgrace'd a part, whose issue Will hiss me to my grave. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
What's the newelft grief?
—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker,
Each minute teems a new one. Shakesp. Macbeth.

HIS. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The voice of a serpent, and of some other animals.
2. Censure; expression of contempt used in theatres.
He heard
On all sides, from innumerable tongues,
A dismal universal hiss, the sound
Of public scorn! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Fierce champion fortitude, that knows no fears
Of hisses, blows, or want, or loss of ears. Pope's Dunciad.
HIST. interj. [Of this word I know not the original: probably it may be a corruption of hush, hush it, hush it, hush it.] An exclamation commanding silence.
Hiss! Romeo, hiss! O for a false voice,
To lure this tassel gentle back again. Shakesp. Rom. and Jul.
Mute silence hiss along!
'Tis Philomel will deign a song,
In her sweetest saddest plight,
Smoothing the rugged brow of night.
Hiss, hiss, says another that stood by, away, doctor, for here's a whole pack of dilmals coming. Swift.

HISTORIAN. n. f. [historicus, Latin; historien, French.] A writer of facts and events; a writer of history.
What thanks sufficient, or what recompence
Equal, have I to render thee, divine Historian!
Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians. Addison's Freeholder.
Not added years on years my tale could close,
The long historian of my country's woes. Pope's Odyssey.

HISTORICAL. adj. [historique, Fr. historicus, Latin.]
HISTORICK. adj. [historique, Fr. historicus, Latin.]
1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.
Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer.
Here rising bold, the patriot's honest face;
There warriors frowning in historick brats. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.
In an historical relation we use terms that are most proper and best known. Burton's Theory of the Earth.
With equal justice and historick care,
Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.
HISTORICALLY. adv. [from historical.] In the manner of history; by way of narration.
The gospels, which are weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered in his own person. Hooker, b. v.
When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we construe as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God? Hooker, b. iii. f. 5.
After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him. Pope's Essay on Homer.

TO HISTORIFY. v. a. [from history.] To relate; to record in history.
O, muse, historify
Her praise, whose praise to learn your skill hath framed me.
The third age they term historicon; that is, such wherein matters have been more truly historified, and therefore may be believed. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 6.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. f. [historia and graphia; historiographie, Fr.] An historian; a writer of history.
Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these knights several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer.
What poor ideas must strangers conceive of these persons who have been famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those out historiographers? Addison's Freeholder, No. 35.

I put the journals of all transactions into a strong box, after the manner of the historiographers of some eastern monarchs. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. f. [historia and graphia.] The art or employment of an historian.
HISTORY. n. f. [historia; historia, Latin; histoire, French.]

TO HIT. v. a. [from hitus, Latin, Miniscus, from hitte, Danish, to throw at random, Junius.]
1. To strike; to touch with a blow.
When I first saw her I was presently stricken; and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing hits him will strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived. Sidney, b. ii.
His conscience shall hit him in the teeth, and tell him his sin and folly. South's Sermon.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.
Is he a god that ever flies the light?
Or naked he, disguised in all untruth?
If he be blind, how hit he to be right?
So hard it is to tremble, and not to cry, and to hit the mark with a shaking hand. South's Sermon.

3. To attain; to reach the point.
Were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is so hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Search every comment that your care can find,
Some here, some there, may hit the poet's mind. Roscomm.
Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to hit the notes right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns.

Here's an opportunity to shew how great a bungler my author is in hitting features. Attorney.
4. To strike a ruling passion.
Hail, divinest melancholy!
Whole faintly visage is too bright
To hit the sense of human sight. Milton.
There you hit him: St. Dominick loves charity exceeding; ly; that argument never fails with him. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

5. To hit off. To strike out; to fix or determine luckily.
What prince soever can hit off this great secret, need know no more either for his own safety, or that of the people he governs. Temple.
6. To hit out. To perform by good luck.
Having the sound of these ancient poets still ringing in his ears, he mought needs in finging hit out some of their unces. Spenser's Pastoral.

TO HIT. v. n.
1. To clash; to collide.
If bodies be extension alone, how can they move and hit one against another; or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension?
The bones, teeth, and shells being sustained in the water with these metallic corpuscles, and the said corpuscles meeting with and hitting upon those bodies, become conjoined with them. Woodward's Natural History.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident; not to miss.
Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it hits
Where hope is coldest, and despair most fits. Shakesp. Lear.
There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it. Bacon's Essay 53.

3. To succeed; not to miscarry.
The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it hits for the most part. Bacon's Natural History.

But

HIT

But thou bring'st valour too and wits, Hudibras, p. i.
Two things that seldom fail to hit.
This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible; for friars have free admittance into every house. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
All human race would fain be wits,
And millions mis for one that hits. Swift.

4. To light on.
You've hit upon the very strings, which touch'd,
Echoes the sound, and jars within my soul;
There lies my grief. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing before that time: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon it. Tillotson's Sermon.

There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon't, when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg. L'Estr.
None of them hit upon the art. Addison's Guardian.
There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design. Bentley.

HIT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A stroke.
The king hath laid, that in a dozen paffes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits. Shakesp. Hamlet.
So he the fam'd Cilician fencer prais'd,
And at each hit with wonder seem'd amaz'd. Dryd. Juvon.

2. A lucky chance.
Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit? Shak.
To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Glanville.
If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill, but chance; not a true judgment, but a lucky hit. South's Sermon.

But with more lucky hit than those
That use to make the stars depose. Hudibras, p. i.
The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Estr.
These hits of words a true poet often finds, without seeking. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

If casual concourse did the world compose,
And things and hits fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring? Blackmore.
If at first he minds his hits,
And drinks champagne among the wits,
Five deep he toasts the tow'ring lasses. Prior.

TO HIT. v. n. [hizan, Saxon, or hechen, French. Stinner.]
To catch; to move by jerks. I know not where it is used but in the following passage.
Who'er offends, at some unlucky time
Slides in a verse, or hitches in a rhyme;
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long.
And the sad burthen of some merry song. Pope's Horace.

TO HITCHEL. v. a. [See HATCHEL.] To beat or comb flax or hemp.
HITCHEL. n. f. [hachel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten or combed.

HOAROUND. n. f. [marrubium, Latin.] A plant.
It is a verticillate plant with a lip flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip or crest is upright, with two horns; but the under lip or beard is divided into three parts: the point is fixed to the hinder part of the flower, and attended by four embryoes, which become so many oblong seeds, inclosed in the flower-cup. Miller.
Hoarhound has its leaves and flower-cup covered very thick with a white hoariness: it is famous for the relief it gives in moist asthma, and in all diseases of the breast and lungs, of which a thick and viscous matter is the cause; but it is now little used. Hill's Mat. Med.
HOARINESS. n. f. [from hoary.] The state of being whitish;
the colour of old men's hair.
He grows a wolf, his hoariness remains,
And the same rage in other members reigns. Dryden.
HOARSE. adj. [paz, Saxon; heersck, Dutch.] Having the voice rough, as with a cold; having a rough sound.
Come, fit, fit, and a song.
—Clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Bacon's Natural History.
The lasting of plants is most in those that are largest of body; as oak, elm, and chestnut, and this holdeth in trees;
but in herbs it is often contrary.
Bacon's Natural History.
When the religion formerly received is rent by discords, and when the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed, and full of scandal, and withal the times be stupid, ignorant, and barbarous, you may doubt the springing up of a new sect;
if then also there should arise any extravagant and strange spirits, to make himself author thereof; all which points hold when Mahomet published his law.
Bacon, Essay 59.
Nothing can be of greater use and defence to the mind than the discovering of these colours, shewing in what cases they hold, and in what they deceive.
Where outward force constrains, the sentence hold;
But who constrains me?
So doth he deal with the testimonies of the fathers, let them within them, though they be dry substances. Burnet.

2. Deceit; insincerity; treachery.
Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty hearted, whose love found Reverbs no hollowness. Shakespeare's King Lear.
People, young and raw, and soft natured, think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of any man's; but when experience shall have shewn them the hardness of most hearts, the hollowness of others, and the baseness and ingratitude of almost all, they will then find that a friend is the gift of God, and that he only who made hearts can unite them. Saunders's Sermon.
HOLLOWROOT. n. f. [hollow and root.] A plant. Ainsworth.
HOLLY. n. f. [hollyn, Saxon.] A plant.
The leaves are set about the edges with long, sharp, stiff prickles: the berries are small, round, and generally of a red colour, containing four triangular striated seeds in each. Of this tree there are several species; some variegated in the leaves, some with yellow berries, and some with white. Mill.

fice of which the whole was consumed by fire, and nothing retained by the offerer.
Isaac carried the wood for the sacrifice, which being an holocaust, or burnt offering, to be consumed unto ashes, we cannot well conceive a burthen for a boy. Brown's Vulg. Err.
Let the eye behold no evil thing, and it is made a sacrifice;
let the tongue speak no filthy word, and it becomes an oblation; let the hand do no unlawful action, and you render it a holocaust. Ray on the Creation.
Eunemes cut a piece from every part of the victim, and by this he made it an holocaust, or an entire sacrifice. Brome.
HOLocaust. n. f. [holos and caustus.] This word is used in the Scottish law to denote a deed written altogether by the grantor's own hand.

made their oaths of fidelity to the earl marshal. Davies.
2. Obedience; respect paid by external action.
The gods great mother, when her heav'nly race
Do homage to her. Denham.
A tuft of daisies on a flow'ry lay
They saw, and thitherward they bent their way;
To this both knights and dames their homage made,
And due obedience to the daily paid. Dryden.
Go, go, with homage you proud victors meet!
Go, lie like dogs beneath your masters feet. Dryden.
To HOMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To reverence by external action; to pay honour to; to profess fealty.
HOMAGER. n. f. [homagior, Fr. from homage.] One who holds by homage of some superior lord.
As I'm Egypt's queen,
Thou bluest me, Antony; and that blood of thine
Is Caesar's homager. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
His subjects, traitors, are received by the duke of Bretagne his homager. Bacon's Henry VII.
HOME. n. f. [ham, Saxon.]
1. His own house; the private dwelling.
I'm now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment. Shakespeare.
Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife.
When Hector went to see
His virtuous wife, the fair Andromache,
He found her not at home; for she was gone. Dryden.
Those who have homes, when home they do repair,
To a last lodging calls their wand'ring friends. Dryden.

My unprovided body. Shakespeare's King Lear.
A loyal fir
To him thou follow'st: I will pay thy graces Home both in word and deed. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Her cause and yours
I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring you
Before the duke, and to the head of Angelo Accuse him home and home. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
Men of age object too much, adventure too little, and fel-domy drive business home to the full period; but content themselves with a mediocrity of success. Bacon.
That cometh up home to the business, and taketh off the objection clearly. Sanderfon.

Break through the thick array
Of his throng'd legions, and charge home upon him. Albif.
He makes choice of some piece of morality; and in order to press this home, he makes less use of the force of reasoning.

Pope's View of Epic Poems.
I can only refer the reader to the authors themselves, who speak very home to the point. Atterbury's Sermon, Preface.
5. United to a substantive, it implies force and efficacy.
Poison may be false;

The home thrust of a friendly sword is sure. Dryden.
I am sorry to give him such home thrusts; for he lays himself to open, and uses so little art to avoid them, that I must either do nothing, or expose his weakness. Stillingfleet.
HOMEBORN. adj. [home and born.]

1. Native; natural.
Though to be thus elemented, arm
These creatures from homeborn intrinsic harm. Donne.

And homebred evil, ye desire to hear,
I can you tydings tell. Fairy Queen, cant. i.

This once happy land,
By homebred fury rent, long groan'd. Phillips.
HOMEFELT. adj. [home and felt.] Inward; private.

Yet they in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense,
And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself;
But such a sacred and homefelt delight,
Such sober certainty of waking bliss,
I never heard 'till now. Milton.

Happy next him who to these shades retires,
Whom nature charms, and whom the muse inspires,
Whom humbler joys of homefelt quiet please,
Successful study, exercise, and ease. Pope.
HOMELY. adv. [from homely.] Rudely; inelegantly.

HOMELINESS. n. f. [from homely.] Plainness; rudeness; coarseness.

HOM

Homer has opened a great field of railery to men of more delicacy than greatness of genius, by the homeliness of some of his sentiments. Addison's Spectator.

HOMELY. adj. [from home.] Plain; homely; not elegant;
not beautiful; not fine; coarse; rude.
Each place handsome without curiosity, and homely without loathsomeness. Sidney.

Within this wood, out of a rock did rise
A spring of water, mildly tumbling down;
Whereto approached not in any wife
The homely shepherd, nor the ruder clown. Spenser.

Like rich hangings in an homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;
Riddling confession finds but riddling thrift. Shakespeare.

Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits. Shakespeare.
Our stomachs will make what's homely favour. Shakespeare.
It is for homely features to keep home;
They had their name thence. Milton.

It is observed by some, that there is none so homely but loves a looking-glass. South's Sermon.
Their homely fare dispatch'd, the hungry band
Invade their trenchers next. Dryden's Ex. b. vii.

Now Strephon daily entertains
His Chloë in the homely strains. Swift.
Homely persons, the more they endeavour to adorn themselves, the more they expose the defects they want to hide. Clar.

but rich: every thing he wore was substantial, honest, home- spun ware. Addison.

3. Plain; coarse; rude; homely; inelegant.
They sometimes put on, when they go ashore, long flee-vels coats of homespun cotton. Sandys's Travels.

We lay, in our homespun English proverb, He killed two birds with one stone; pleaded the emperor, by giving him the resemblance of his ancestors, and gave him such a resemblance as was not scandalous in that age. Dryden's Juvén. Dedicat.

Our homespun authors must forsake the field,
And Shakespeare to the lost Scylla yield. Addison.
HOMESPOUN. n. f. A coarse, inelegant, rude, untaught, rustic man.

What hempen homespuns have we swagging here,
So near the cradle of the fairy queen? Shakespeare.

the place of residence.

Then Urania homeward did arise,
Leaving in pain their well-fed hungry eyes. Sidney.
My affairs

Do even drag me homeward. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties; so I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.

Look homeward, angel now, and melt with ruth;
And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth! Milton.
Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky,
Which homeward from their wat'ry pastures born,
They sing, and Asia's lakes their notes return. Dryden's Ex.

What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,
And, wand'ring homewards, seek our safety hence. Dryden.
HOMICIDE. n. f. [homicide, French; homicidium, Latin.]

1. Murder; manquelling.
The apostles command to abstain from blood: confine this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden; but confine it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood. Hooker, b. iv.

2. Destruction.

HON

2. Destruction. In the following lines it is not proper.
What wonder is't that black detraction thrives!
The homicide of names is less than lives. Dryden.
3. [Homicide, Fr. homicida, Lat.] A murderer; a man-slayer.
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep,
To undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your sweet bosom.
—If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakespeare.

Hector comes, the homicide, to wield
His conqu'ring arms, with corps to strew the field. Dryden.
HOMICIDAL. adj. [from homicide.] Murderous; bloody.

With homicidal rage, the king opprest. Pope's Odyssey.

HOMILETICAL. adj. [homiletikos, Gr.] Social; conversible.
His life was holy, and when he had leisure for retirements, severe: his virtues active chiefly, and homiletical; not those lazy fullen ones of the cloyster. Atterbury.

HOMILY. n. f. [homilis, French; homilia, Lat.] A discourse read to a congregation.
Homilies were a third kind of readings usual in former times;
a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the causal, as now the necessary defect of sermons. Hooker.

What tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried have patience, good people.
Shakespeare's As you like it.

If we survey the homilies of the ancient church, we shall discern that, upon festival days, the subject of the homily was constantly the business of the day. Hammond's Fundamentals.

HOMOGENEAL. adj. [homogene, Fr. homogène.] Having HOMOGENEOUS. } the same nature or principles; suitable to each other.

thing.

HONEST. adj. [honestus, French; honestus, Latin.]
1. Upright; true; sincere.
What art thou?

—A very honest hearted fellow, and as poor as the king. Sh.
The way to relieve ourselves from those sophisms, is an honest and diligent enquiry into the real nature and causes of

2. Chaste.
Wives may be merry, and yet honest too. Shakespeare.
3. Just; righteous; giving to every man his due.
4. It is sometimes used criminally for dishonest; base.
I'll devote some honest flanders

To stain my cousin with: one doth not know
How much an ill word doth importun liking. Shakespeare.
HONESTLY. adv. [from honest.]
1. Uprightly; justly.
It doth make me tremble,

HON

There should those spirits yet breathe, that when they cannot Live honestly, would rather perish basely. Ben. Jonson's Catil.
For some time past all endeavours or proposals from private persons to advance the publick service, however honestly and innocently designed, have been called flying in the king's face. Swift.

2. With chastity; modestly.
HONESTY. n. f. [honesteté, French; honestas, Latin.] Justice; truth; virtue; purity.
Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.

—Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower. Shakespeare.
Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem. Temple.

HONIED. adj. [from hony.]
1. Covered with honey.

That at her flow'ry work doth sing. Milton.
2. Sweet; luscious.
When he speaks,
The air, a chartered libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honed sentences. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue Draws hitherward. Milton's Agonistes.

HONEY. n. f. [from hony, Saxon; honig, Dutch; honey, honey, German.]

1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming viscous on fermentation, inflammable, liquefiable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. We have three kinds of honey:
the first and finest is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell: it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining from the combs without pressing. The second is thicker than the first, often almost solid, procured from the combs by pressure: and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs over the fire, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee, by means of its proboscis or trunk, sucks up, swallows it, flies away with it to the hive, and discharges again from the stomach through the mouth into some of the cells of the comb. The honey thus taken up into the body of the bee, and deposited again into the cells of the comb, is destined for the food of the young offspring; but in hard seasons the bees are sometimes reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves, and die of hunger after they have eat it all up. Honey, taken out of the new combs early in the Summer, is vastly preferable to that taken from the same hive in Autumn. Honey is an excellent pectoral, is detergent, aperient, and diuretic. Hill's Mat. Med.

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a ruling nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

The like contention is found among the Greeks, touching his education and first fostering: some affirm, that he was fed by honey bees. Raisin's History of the World.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours. Bacon's Natural History.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey pot.

Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sope, solvent of the bile, balsamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable spirit, before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbutnot.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring;
Then living waters from the crystal spring. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Sweetness; lusciousness.
The king hath found
Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.

3. A name of tenderness; sweet; sweetness. [Mel; coram. un.]
Honey, you shall be well dehr'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongst them. Oh, my sweet,
I prattle out of fashion, and I dote
In mine own comfort. Shakespeare's Othello.

Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee: did it not thou say, thou long'dst for a Christian slave? Dryden.
To HONEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live
In the rank sweat of an incestuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the natty fly. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

HONEY-BAG.

HONEY-DEW. n. f. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects. Mortimer's Husbandry.

How honey-dews embalm the fragrant morn,
And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn. Garth.

HONEY-FLOWER. n. f. [melanthus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub: the leaves are like those of burnet; the cup of the flower is divided into several parts: the flower consists of four leaves, and is of an anomalous figure, sometimes in the shape of a fan, and at other times conical: the ovary becomes a fruit, resembling a bladder four cornered, divided into four cells, and pregnant with roundish seeds. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name. Miller.

HONEY-GNAT. n. f. [melis, Latin; honey and gnats.] An insect.

HONEY-MOON. n. f. [honey and moon.] The first month after marriage, when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

A man should keep his fiery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to drefs till the honey-moon is over. Addis.

HONEY-SUCKLE. n. f. [caprifolium, Latin.] Woodbine.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatsoever tree stands near it; the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntsman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it. Shakespeare.

With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.

Then melloil beat, and honey-suckle pound;
With these alluring favours strew the ground. Dryd. Virgil.

HONEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hyla bees,
And leave them honeyless. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

HONEY-WORT. n. f. [corvinus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath glaucous deep green leaves, which are, for the most part, beset with prickles: the flowers are cylindrical, consisting of one leaf, in shape like those of confrey, and are pendulous: each flower turns to the top of the second page of the third leaf following. Miller.

HONORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour.
2. There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addison on Italy.
3. This monument is only honorary; for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere. Addison on Italy.
4. Conferring honour without gain.
5. The Romans abounded with these little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addis. Guard.

HONOUR. n. f. [honour, French; honor, Latin.]

The clamorous owl, that nightly hoops, and wonders
At our quaint sports. Shaksp. Midsum. Night's Dream.

TO HOOP, v. a. To drive with noise and shouts.
We lov'd him; but, like beasts,
Our coward nobles gave way to your clustlers,
Who did hoop him out o' th' city. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
The owl of Rome, whom boys and girls will hoop!
That were I set up for that wooden god
That keeps our gardens, could not fright the crows,
Or the least bird, from muting on my head. Ben. Jonson.
Partridge and his clan may hoop me for a cheat and impostor, if I fail in any particular of moment. Swift.

HOP

HOOT, n. f. [hute, French, from the verb.] Clamour; shout; noise.
Its assertion would be entertained with the hoot of the rabble. Glancville's Scyll.

TO HOP, v. n. [poppan, Saxon; hoppen, Dutch.]
1. To jump; to skip lightly.
I would have thee gone,
And yet no further than a wanton's bird,
That lets it hop a little from her hand,
And with a silk thread plucks it back again. Shaksp. As You Like It.

Go, hop me over every kennel home;
For you shall hop without my custom, sir. Shaksp. As You Like It.
Be kind and courteous to this gentleman,
Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes. Shaksp. As You Like It.

The painted birds, companions of the Spring,
Hopping from spray to spray were heard. Dryden.
Your Ben and Fletcher, in their first young flight,
Did no Volpone, nor no Arbaces write;
But hopp'd about, and short excursions made
From bough to bough, as if they were afraid. Dryden.

Why don't we vindicate ourselves by trial ordeal, and hop over heated ploughshares blindfold. Cleric on Duelling.
I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks.

2. To leap on one leg.
Men with heads like dogs, and others with one huge foot alone, whereupon they did hop from place to place. Abbot.

3. To walk lamely, or with one leg less nimble or strong than the other; to limp; to halt.
The limping smith observ'd the fadden'd sealt,
And hopping here and there, himself a jest,
Put in his word. Dryden's Homer.

4. To move; to play.
Softly feel
Her feeble pulse, to prove if any drop
Of living blood yet in her veins did hop. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

HOP, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A jump; a light leap.
2. A jump on one leg.
When my wings are on, I can go above a hundred yards at a hop, step, and jump. Addison's Guardian.

3. A place where meane people dance. Addison's Guardian.
HOP, n. f. [hop, Dutch; hoppus, Latin.] A plant.
It has a creeping root; the leaves are rough, angular, and conjugated; the stalks climb and twist about whatever is near them; the flowers are male and female on different plants; the male flower consists of a calyx divided into five parts, which surrounds the stamina, but has no petals to the flower: the female plants have their flowers collected into squamose heads, which grow in bunches: from each of the leafy scales is produced an horned ovary, which becomes a single roundish seed. Miller.

If hop yard or orchard ye mind for to have,
For hop poles and croches in lopping go save. Tuff. Hub.
The planting of hop yards is profitable for the planters, and consequently for the kingdom. Bacon's Advice to Philip.
Beer hath malt first infused in the liquor, and is afterwards boiled with the hop. Bacon's Natural History.

Next to thistles are hop strings, cut after the flowers are gathered.
Have the poles without forks, otherwise it will be troublesome to part the hop vines and the poles. Mortimer's Husbandry.
When you water hops, on the top of every hill put dissolved dung, which will enrich your hop hills. Mortimer's Husbandry.
In Kent they plant their hop gardens with apple-trees and cherry-trees between. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The price of hoeing of hop ground is forty shillings an acre. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Hop poles, the largest sort, should be about twenty foot long, and about nine inches in compass. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HOPE, n. f. [popa, Saxon; hope, Dutch.]

1. Expectation of some good; an expectation indulged with pleasure.
There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again. Jeb. xiv. 7.
Hope is that pleasure in the mind which every one finds in himself, upon the thought of a profitable future enjoyment of a thing, which is apt to delight him. Locke.

When in heav'n the shall his essence see,
This is her low-reign good, and perfect bliss;
Her longing, wishings, hopes, all finish'd be;
Her joys are full, her motions rest in this. David.

Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by thee
We are not where or what we be;
But what and where we would be: thus art thou
Our absent presence, and our future now. Cresswell.

2. To increase the milk, diminished by flesh-meats, take male drink not much hopped. Arbustnot on Aliments.
HOPE, n. f. [popa, Saxon; hope, Dutch.]

Faith is opposed to infidelity, and hope to despair. Taylor.
He fought them both, but with'd his hap might find Eve separate: he with'd, but not with hope
Of what so seldom chanc'd: when to his will,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies. Milton's Parad. Lost.

The Trojan dames
To Pallas' fane in long procession go,
In hopes to reconcile their heav'nly foe. Dryden's Virg. En.

Why not comfort myself with the hope of what may be, as torment myself with the fear on't? L'Estrange.
To encourage our hopes it gives us the highest assurance of most lasting happiness, in case of obedience. Tillotson.

The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for light, desire for enjoyment. Atterbury.
Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may have some hopes of them. Swift.

2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any body.
It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him. 2 Mac. vii. 14.
Blessed is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord. Eccles. xiv. 2.

I had hope of France,
E'en as I have of fertile England's soil. Shaksp. Henry VI.
3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be effected.
I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quarter'd. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

4. The object of hope.
Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
To wit, an indigested deform'd lump. Shaksp. Henry VI.

She was his cure, his hope, and his delight,
Most in his thought, and ever in his sight. Dryden.
HOP, n. f. Any sloping plain between the ridges of mountains.

TO HOP, v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To live in expectation of some good.
Hope for good success, according to the efficacy of the causes and the instrument; and let the husbandman hope for a good harvest. Taylor's Rule of living hope.

My muse, by forms long tost,
Is thrown upon your hospitable coast;
And finds more favour by her ill success,
Than she could hope for by her happiness. Dryden.

Who knows what adverse fortune may befall!
Arm well your mind, hope little, and fear all. Dryden.
2. To place confidence in futurity.
He shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord. Pf. xxxi. 24.

TO HOP, v. a. To expect with desire.
The fun shines hot; and if we use delay,
Cold-biting Winter mars our hop'd for hay. Shak. Hen. VI.
So stands the Thracian herdman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden's Fables.

HOPEFUL, adj. [hope and full.]
1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation.
He will advance thee:
I know his noble nature, not to let Thy hopeful service perish. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince whom you must not desert. Bacon.
What to the old can greater pleasure be,
Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see? Denham.

They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are threescore. Addison.
2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.

Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly conceited, whatever they took in hand. Hobbes, b. v.
I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments. Boyle.

Whatever ills the friendless orphan bears,
Bereav'd of parents in his infant years,
Still must the wrong'd Talmochus sustain,
If hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain. Pope's Odyssey.

HOPEFULLY, adv. [from hopeful.]
1. In such a manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.
He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with carls sons and heirs. Watt.
They were ready to renew the war, and to prosecute it hopefully, to the reduction or suppression of the Irish. Clarendon.

2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare.
From your promising and generous endeavours we may hopefully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature. Glauv. Scip. Preface.

Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly conceited, whatever they took in hand. Hobbes, b. v.
I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments. Boyle.

HOPEFULNESS, n. f. [from hopeful.] Promise of good; likelihood to succeed.
Set down beforehand certain signatures of hopefulness, or characters, whereby may be timely described what the child will prove in probability. Watson.

HOPELESS, adj. [from hope.]
1. Without hope; without pleasing expectation.
Are they indifferent, being used as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead? Hooker, b. iv.

Alas, I am a woman, friendless, hopeless! Shaksp. As You Like It.
He watches with greedy hope to find
His wish, and best advantage, us afunder;
Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each
To other speedy aid might lend at need. Milt. Parad. Lost.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,
And hopeless to prevail by open force,
Seeks hid advantage. Dryden's State of Innocence.
Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie
In durance, doom'd a ling'ring death to die. Dryden's Fub.

2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing.
The hopeless word of never to return,
Breathes I against thee upon pain of life. Shaksp. R. II.

HOPELESS, n. f. [from hope.] One that has pleasing expectations.
I except all hopes, who turn the scale, because the strong expectation of a good certain salary, will outweigh the loss by bad rents. Swift on the Sacramental Test.

HOPELESSLY, adv. [from hopeless.] With hope; with expectation of good.
One sign of despair is the peremptory contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope; the going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopelessly, and confidently in wilful habits of sin. Hammond.

HOOPER, n. f. [from hop.] He who hops or jumps on one leg.
HOOPERS, [commonly called Sash hoopers.] A kind of play in which the actor hops on one leg.

HOOPER, n. f. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation. It is called in French, for the same reason, tremie or tremue.]
1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.
The salt of the lake Alphalites shooteth into perfect cubes: sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hooper of a mill. Grew's Colymb. Sac.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill: their maw is the hooper which holds and softens the grains, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach. Arbustnot on Aliments.
Just at the hooper will I stand,
In my whole life I never saw grist ground,
And mark the clack how justly it will found. Batterton.

2. A basket for carrying feed. Ainsworth.
HORAL, adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour.
How'er reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

HORARY, adj. [horaire, French; horarius, Latin.]
1. Relating to an hour.
I'll draw a figure that shall tell you
What you perhaps forgot befell you,
By way of horary inspection,
Which some account our worst erection. Andribrat, p. ii.

In his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has largely discussed, under the character of Reynard, the manner of surprising all sharpers. Tatler, No. 56.

2. Continuing for an hour.
When, from a basket of Summer-fruit, God by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolation, and that their tranquility was of no longer duration than those horary or soon decaying fruits of Summer. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

HORDE, n. f. A clan; a migratory crew of people.
Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,
Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,
And gave the vanquish'd world another form. Thom. Winter.

HORIZON, n. f. [horizon.] The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real: the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shaksp. horizon.
When the morning sun shall raise his car
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates. Shaksp.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland. Bacon's Henry VII.

Far in th' horizon to the North appear'd,
From skirt to skirt, a fiery region. Milton's Paradise Lost.
In his East the glorious lamp was seen,
Regent of day; and all th' horizon round
Invested with bright rays. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

The

HOR

The morning lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her long the morning gray;
And from the fun arose with beams so bright,
That all the horizon laugh'd to see the joyous light. Dryden
When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect. Addison's Spectator HORIZONTAL, adj. [horizontal, French, from horizon.]
1. Near the horizon.
As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.
An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt by Augustus. Brown
The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle? Arbutnot on Coins HORIZONTALLY, adv. [from horizontal.] In a direction parallel to the horizon.
As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally unto it. Brown's Vulg. Err.
The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with celerity. Bentley's Sermons HORN, n. f. [horn, Gothic; horn, Saxon; horn, Dutch.]
1. The hard pointed bodies which grow on the heads of some gaminivorous quadrupeds, and serve them for weapons.
No beast that hath horns hath upper teeth. Bacon's N. Hist.
Zelus rises through the ground,
Bending the bull's tough neck with pain,
That tosse back his horns in vain. Addison on Italy
All that process is no more surprising than the eruption of horns in some brutes, or of teeth and beard in men at certain periods of age. Bentley's Sermons
2. An instrument of wind-musick made of horn.
The squire 'gan n'gher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle-wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Fairy Queen
There's a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news. Shakespeare Merchant of Venice
The goddess to her crooked horn
Adds all her breath: the rocks and woods around,
And mountains, tremble at th' infernal found. Dryden
Fair Alcianus, and his youthful train,
With horns and hounds a hunting match ordain. Dryden
3. The extremity of the waxing or waning moon, as mentioned by poets.
She blest the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryden
The moon
Wears a wan circle round her blunted horns. Thomson
4. The feelers of a snail. Whence the proverb, To pull in the horns, to repress one's ardour.
Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,
Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shakespeare
Aulidius,
Hearing of our Marcius's banishment,
Thrust forth his horns again into the world,
Which were inshell'd when Marcius stood for Rome,
And durst not once peep out. Shakespeare Coriolanus
5. A drinking cup made of horn.
6. Antler of a cuckold.
If I have horns to make one mad,
Let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad. Shakespeare
Merchants, vent'ring through the main,
Slight pyrates, rocks, and horns for gain. Hudibras, p. ii.
7. Horn mad. Perhaps mad as a cuckold.
I am glad he went not in himself: if he had, he would have been horn mad. Shakespeare Merry Wives of Windsor HORNBILL, n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth HORNBEAM, n. f. [horn and beam, Dutch, for tree, from the hardness of the timber.]
It hath leaves like the elm or beech-tree: the katkins are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree, and the outward shell of the fruit is winged. This tree was formerly much used in hedges for wildernesses and orangeries.
The timber is very tough and inflexible, and of excellent use. Miller
HORNBOOK, n. f. [horn and book.] The first book of children, covered with horn to keep it unsoiled.
He teaches boys the hornbook. Shakespeare Love's Labour Lost
Nothing has been considered of this kind out of the ordinary road of the hornbook and primer. Lacke
To master John the English maid
A hornbook gives of ginger-bread;
And that the child may learn the better,
As he can name, he eats the letter. Prior

HORNED, adj. [from horn.] Furnished with horns.
As when two rams, stir'd with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meet, that, with the terror of the flock,
Astonish'd both stand fenceless as a block. Fairy Queen, b. i.
O, that I were
Upon the hill of Bafan, to out-roar
The horned herd. Shakespeare Ant. and Cleopatra
Thither all the horned host resorts,
To graze the ranker mead. Denham
Thou king of horned floods, whose pteuous urn
Suffices fatnels to the fruitful corn. Dryden
HORNED, n. f. [from horn.] One that works in horn, and sells horns.
The skin of a bull's forehead is the part of the hide made use of by horners, whereupon they shave their horns. Greus HORNET, n. f. [hornette, Saxon, from its horns.] A very large strong stinging fly, which makes its nest in hollow trees.
Silence, in times of suff'ring, is the best;
'Tis dangerous to disturb a hornet's nest. Dryden
Hornets do mischief to trees by breeding in them. Mortimer
I have often admir'd how hornets, that gather dry materials for building their nests, have found a proper matter to glue their combs. Derham's Physico-Theology
HORNFOOT, n. f. [horn and foot.] Hoofed.
Mad frantick man,
That did not only quake!
With hornfoot horses, and brags wheels,
Jove's horns to emulate. Hakewill on Providence
HORNOWL, n. f. A kind of horned owl.
HORNPIPE, n. f. [horn and pipe.] A county dance, danced commonly to a horn.
A lusty tabvere,
That to thee many a hornpipe play'd,
Whereto they dauncen each one with his maid. Spenser
There many a hornpipe he tun'd to his Phyllis. Raleigh
Let all the quicksilver i' the mine
Run t' the feet-veins, and refine
Your firkhum jerkhum to a dance
Shall fetch the fiddlers out of France,
To wonder at the hornpipe here
Of Nottingham and Derbyshire. Ben Jonson
Florida danced the Derbyshire hornpipe in the presence of several friends. Tatler, No. 100.
HORNSTONE, n. f. A kind of blue stone.
HORNWORK, n. f. A kind of angular fortification.
HORN, adj. [from horn.]
1. Made of horn.
2. Resembling horn.
He thought he by the brook of Cherith flood,
And saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing even and morn. Milton's Pa. Lost
The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolical figure. Ke Rough are her ears, and broad her horny feet. Dryden
The pineal gland was encompassed with a kind of horny substance. Addison's System
As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates it so as to turn it horny, like parchment; but when it is thoroughly putrified, it will no longer concrete. Arbutnot on Aliments
3. Hard as horn; callous.
Tyneus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden's En.
HOROGRAPHY, n. f. [horographia, Gr. $\omega\gamma\alpha$ and $\gamma\alpha\phi\alpha$.] An account of the hours.
HOROLOGE, n. f. [horologium, Latin.] Any instrument that tells the hour: as a clock; a watch; an hourglass.
'Tis evermore the prologue to his sleep;
He'll watch the horologe a double set, Shakespeare's Othello
If drink rock not his cradle.
Before the days of Jerome there were horologes, that measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses, called clepsydra, but also by sand in glasses, called clepsammina. Brown HOROMETRY, n. f. [horometrie, French; $\omega\gamma\alpha$ and $\mu\epsilon\tau\epsilon\tau\alpha$.] The art of measuring hours.
It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice. Brown's Vulg. Errata HOROSCOPE, n. f. [horoscope, French; $\omega\gamma\alpha$ and $\sigma\kappa\omicron\pi\omicron\varsigma$.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.
How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and counteravail that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth?
A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh house, or opposite signs every seventh year, oppresseth living natures. Brown
Him born beneath a boding horoscope,
His fire, the bleak-eyed Vulcan of a shop,
From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school. Dryden's Jason

The Greek names this the horoscope;
This governs life, and this marks out our parts,
Our humours, manners, qualities and arts. Greuch's Manil.
They understood the planets and the zodiack by instinct, and fell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust they sprung out of. Bentley's Sermons HORRIBLE, adj. [horribilis, French; horribilis, Lat.] Dreadful; terrible; shocking; hideous; enormous.
No colour affecteth the eye much with displeasure: there be fights that are horrible, because they excite the memory of things that are odious or fearful. Bacon's Natural History Eternal happiness and eternal misery, meeting with a persuasion that the soul is immortal, are, of all others, the first the most defireable, and the latter the most horrible to human apprehension. South's Sermons
HORRIBLENESS, n. f. [from horrible.] Dreadfulness; hideousness; terribleness; fearfulness.
HORRIBLY, adv. [from horrible.]
1. Dreadfully; hideously.
What hideous noise was that! Milton's Agonistes
Horribly loud.
2. To a dreadful degree.
The contagion of these ill precedents, both in civility and virtue, horribly infects children. Lacke HORRID, adj. [horridus, Latin.]
1. Hideous; dreadful; shocking.
Oh!
Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,
That we the horrid may seem to those Which chance to find us. Shakespeare's Cymbeline
Not in the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd,
In evils to top Macbeth. Shakespeare's Macbeth
2. Shocking; offensive; unpleasing; in womens cant.
Already I your tears survey,
Already hear the horrid things they say. Pope
3. Rough; rugged.
Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn,
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dry
HORRIDNESS, n. f. [from horrid.] Hideousness; enormity.
A bloody designer fuborns his instrument to take away such a man's life, and the confessor represents the horridness of the fact, and brings him to repentance. Hammond
HORRIFICK, adj. [horrificus, Latin.] Causing horror.
His jaws horrifick, arm'd with three-fold fate,
Here dwells the direful shark. Thomson's Summer
HORRIFONOUS, adj. [horrifonus, Latin.] Sounding dreadfully.
HORROR, n. f. [horror, Latin; horreur, French.]
1. Terror mix'd with detestation; a passion compounded of fear and hate, both strong.
Over them sad horror, with grim hue,
Did always fear, beating his iron wings;
And after him owls and night ravens flew,
The hateful messengers of heavy thoughts. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
I have sapt full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my laught'rous thoughts,
Cannot once start me. Shakespeare's Macbeth
Doubtless all souls have a surviving thought,
Therefore of death we think with quiet mind;
But if we think of being turn'd to nought,
A trembling horror in our souls we find. Davies
Me damp horror chill'd
At such bold words, vouch'd with a deed so bold. Milton
Deep horror seizes ev'ry human breast;
Their pride is humbled, and their fear confess'd. Dryden
2. Gloom; dreariness.
Her gloomy preference saddens all the scene,
Shades ev'ry flow'r, and darkens ev'ry green;
Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope
3. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit; a sense of shuddering or shivering.
All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and, upon their flight, the parts are in some degree destitute, and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Natural History
HORSE, n. f. [horse, Saxon.]
1. A neighing quadruped, used in war, and draught and carriage.
Duncan's horses, the minions of the race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls. Shakespeare Macbeth
A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! Shakespeare R. III.
I would sell my horses, and buy ten more Better than he. Shakespeare Timon of Athens
Thy face, bright centaur, Autumn's heats retain,
The foster season suiting to the man;
Whilst Winter's shivering goat afflicts the horse
With frost, and makes him an uneasy course. Greuch
We call a little horse, such a one as comes not up to the size of that idea which we have in our minds to belong ordinarily to horses. Lacke

HOR

I took horse to the lake of Constance, which is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison on Italy
2. It is used in the plural sense, but with a singular termination; for horses, horsemen, or cavalry.
I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was't came by? Shakespeare Macb.
The armies were appointed, consisting of twenty-five thousand horse and foot, for the repelling of the enemy at their landing. Bacon's War with Spain
If they had known that all the king's horse were quartered behind them, their foot might very well have marched away with their horse. Clarendon, b. viii.
Th' Arcadian horse
With ill success engage the Latin force. Dryden's En.
3. Something on which any thing is supported: as, a horse to dry linen on.
4. A wooden machine which soldiers ride by way of punishment. It is sometimes call'd a timber-mare.
5. Joined to another substantive, it signifies something large or coarse: as, a horseface, a face of which the features are large and indelicate.
To HORSE, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To mount upon a horse.
He came out with all his clowns, horsed upon such cartjades, and so furnished, as in good faith I thought with myself, if that were thine, I wist none of my friends or subjects ever to thrive. Sidney, b. ii.
After a great fight there came to the camp of Gonzalvo, the great captain, a gentleman proudly horsed and armed: Diego de Mendoza asked the great captain, Who's this? Who answered, It is St. Ermin, who never appears but after the storm. Bacon's Apophthegms
2. To carry one on the back.
3. To ride any thing.

tamers of wild beasts. Greuch
HORSECHESNUT, n. f. [horse and chesnut.] A plant.
It hath digitated or fingered leaves: the flowers, which consist of five leaves, are of an anomalous figure, opening with two lips: there are male and female upon the same spike:
the female flowers are succeeded by nuts, which grow in green prickly hulks. Their whole year's shoot is commonly performed in three weeks time, after which it does no more than increase in bulk, and become more firm; and all the latter part of the Summer is occupied in forming and strengthening the buds for the next year's shoots. Miller
I may bring in the horsechesnut, which grows into a goodly standard. Mortimer's Husbandry
HORSECOUSER, n. f. [horse and couser.] Junius derives it from horse and couse, an old Scotch word, which signifies to change; and it should therefore, he thinks, be writ horsecofer.
The word now used in Scotland is horsecouper, to denote a jockey, seller, or rather changer of horses. It may well be derived from course, as he that sells horses may be supposed to course or exercise them.
1. One that runs horses, or keeps horses for the race.
2. A dealer in horses.
A servant to a horsecouser was thrown off his horse. Wifem.

 To seek to put me down, and reign thyself. Shakespeare's H. VI.
Hostility, being thus suspended with France, preparation was made for war against Scotland. Hayward.
 What peace can we return;
 But, to our pow'r, hostility and hate,
 Untam'd reluctance and revenge? Milt. Parad. Lost, b. ii.
 In this bloody dispute we have shew'd ourselves fair, nay, generous adversaries; and have carried on even our hostilities with humanity. Atterbury's Sermons.
HOT-STER. n. f. [hosteller, from hostel.] One who has the care of horses at an inn.
 The cause why they are now to be permitted is want of convenient inns for lodging travellers on horseback, and hostlers to tend their horses by the way. Spenser on Ireland.
HOTSTRY. n. f. [corrupted from hostelry.] A place where the horses of guests are kept.
 Swift rivers are with sudden ice constrain'd,
 And studded wheels are on its back sustain'd;
 An hostry now for waggons, which before
 Tall ships of burden on its bosom bore. Dryden's Georg.
HOT. adj. [pat, Saxon; hot, Scottish.]
 1. Having the power to excite the sense of heat; contrary to cold; fiery.
 What is thy name?
 —Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.
 —No, though thou call't thyself a hotter name
 Than any is in hell. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 The great breezes which the motion of the air in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore, in those parts, noon is nothing so hot as about nine in the forenoon. Bacon's Natural History.
 Hot and cold were in one body fixt;
 And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.
 Black substances do soonest of all others become hot in the sun's light, and burn; which effect may proceed partly from the multitude of refractions in a little room, and partly from easy commotion of so very small corpuscles. Newton's Opt.
 2. Lustful; lewd.
 What hotter hours,
 Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

1. With heat; not coldly.
2. Violently; vehemently.
The flag was in the end fo botly pursued, that he was driven to make courage of despair. Sidney.
I do contest
As botly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour. Shak. Coriolanus.
The enemy, now at hand, began botly to skirmish in divers places with the Christians. Knolly's History of the Turks.
Though this controversy be revived, and botly agitated, I doubt whether it be not a nominal dispute. Boyle.
3. Lustfully.
Voracious birds, that botly bill and breed,
And largely drink, because on salt they feed. Dryden.
HOTMOUTHED. adj. [bot and mouth.] Headstrong; ungovernable.
I fear my people's faith,
That hotmouth'd beast that bears against the curb,
Hard to be broken. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
HO'NESS. n. f. [from hot.] Heat; violence; fury.
HO'TCHPOTCH. n. f. [hachet en potche, French; or hachet en pot, French, as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used.] A mingled halm;
a mixture.
Such patching maketh Littleton's botchpot of our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rather to a Babelish confusion than any one entire language. Camden's Remains.
A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture or botchpotch of many tastes is unpleasant to the taste. Bacon's Natural History.
Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcass would remain;
But a maff'd heap, a botchpotch of the slain. Dryd. Juvenal.
HO'TSPUR. n. f. [bot and spur.]
1. A man violent, passionate, precipitate and heady.
My nephew's trespafs may be well forgot;
It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,
A harebrain'd hotspur, govern'd by a spleen. Shaksp. H. IV.
Wars are begun by hairbrained dilolute captains, parasitical fawners, unquiet hotspurs, and restless innovators. Burton.
2. A kind of pea of speedy growth.
Of such peas as are planted or sown in gardens, the hotspur is the speediest of any in growth. Mortimer's Husbandry.
HO'TSPURRED. adj. [from hotspur.] Vehement; rash;
heady.
To draw Mars like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or Venus like that hotspurred Harpalice in Virgil, this proceedeth from a senseless judgment. Pracham.
HOVE. The preterite of have.
HO'VEL. n. f. [Diminutive of hope, house, Saxon.]
1. A shed open on the sides, and covered overhead.
So likewise a hovel will serve for a room,
To stacke on the pease, when harvest shall come. Tusser.
If you make a large hovel, thatched, over some quantity of ground, plank the ground over, and it will breed saltpetre.
Bacon's Natural History.
Your hay it is mow'd, your corn it is reap'd,
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd. Dryden.
2. A mean habitation; a cottage.
The men clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them and milk them, and do all the dairy-work in such forry hovels and sheds as they build to inhabit in during the summer. Ray on the Creation.
To HO'VEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To shelter in an hovel.
And wasn't thou faint, poor father,
To hovel thee with twine and rogues forlorn,
In short and muffy straw? Shakspere's King Lear.

HOU

HO'VEN. part. pass. [from leave.] Raised; swelled; tumefied.
Tom Piper hath hoven and puffed up cheeks;
If cheese be so hoven, make Giff to seek creeks. Tusser.
To HO'VEN. v. n. [hoveis, to hang over, Welsh.]
1. To hang in the air over head, without flying off one way or other.
Some fiery devil hovens in the sky,
And pours down mischief. Shak. King John.
Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hoven about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation. Shak. Richard III.
A hovering mist came swimming o'er his fight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night. Dryden's En.
Great flights of birds are hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it. Addison's Spectator.
Till as the earthly part decays and falls,
The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;
Hovers a-while upon the sad remains,
Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,
And thence with liberty unbounded flies,
Impatient to regain her native skies.
Some less rein'd, beneath the moon's pale light,
Hoven, and catch the shooting stars by night. Pope.
2. To stand in suspense or expectation.
The landlord will no longer covenant with him; for that he daily looketh after change and alteration, and hoveth in expectation of new worlds. Speyer on Ireland.
3. To wander about one place.
We see so warlike a prince at the head of so great an army, hovering on the borders of our confederates. Addison.
The truth and certainty is seen, and the mind fully possess itself of it; in the other, it only hovens about it. Locke.
HOUGH. n. f. [hog, Saxon.]
1. The lower part of the thigh.
Blood shall be from the sword unto the belly, and dung of men unto the camel's hough. 2 Esd. xiii. 36.
2. [Hue, French.] An adz; an hoe. See Hoe.
Did they really believe that a man, by houghs and an adz, could cut a god out of a tree? Stillington.
To HOUGH. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To hamstring; to disable by cutting the sinews of the ham.
Thou shalt hough their horses. Jes. ii. 6.
2. To cut up with an hough or hoe.
3. To hawk. This orthography is uncommon. See To Hawk.
Neither could we hough or spit from us; much less could we sneeze or cough. Grew's Colmat. Sac. b. i.
HO'ULTR. n. f. The vulgar name for an owl. The Scots and northern counties still retain it.
HOULTR. n. f. [poltr, Saxon.] A small wood. Obsolete.
Or as the wind, in haults and shady groves,
A murmur makes among the boughs and leaves. Fairfax.
HOUND. n. f. [puno, Saxon; hund, Scottish.] A dog used in the chase.
Hounds and greyhounds, mungrels, spaniels, curs,
Are cleped all by the name of dogs. Shakspere's Macbeth.
Jafon threw, but fail'd to wound
The boar, and flew an undeserving hound,
And through the dog the dart was nail'd to ground. Dryd.
The kind spaniel and the faithful hound,
Likest that fox in shape and species found,
Pursues the noted path and covets home. Prior.
To HOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To set on the chase.
God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare. Bramhall.
2. To hunt; to pursue.
If the wolves had been hounded by tygers, they should have worried them. L'Estrange.
HO'UNDFISH. n. f. A kind of fish.
HOUNDSTO'NGUE. n. f. [synoglossum, Latin.] A plant.
The cup of the flower consists of one leaf, deeply cut into five parts: the flower consists of one leaf, which arises from the and cut into five segments: the pointal, which arises from the bottom of the flower, changes into a fruit composed of four rough, each for the most part burry cells, and containing a flat seed affixed to a pyramidal and quadrilateral placenta. The proper season to take the roots up is soon after the leaves decay. Miller.
HO'UNTREE. n. f. A kind of tree.
HOUP. n. f. [suppas, Latin.] The puet.
HO'UR. n. f. [heure, French; hora, Latin.]
1. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; the space of sixty minutes.
See the minutes how they run:
How many makes the hour full compleat,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shaksp. H. VI.
2. A particular time.
Vexation

HOU

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That under'd friends great in the hour of death. Shaksp.
When we can interest an hour to serve,
We'll spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time. Shakspere's Macbeth.
The conscious wretch must all his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden's En.
3. The time as marked by the clock.
The hour runs through the roughest day. Shakspere.
Our neighbour let her floor to a genteel man, who kept good hours. Tatler, N^o. 88.
They are as loud any hour of the morning, as our own countrymen at midnight. Addison's Guardian.
HO'URGASS. n. f. [hour and glass.]
1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.
Next morning, known to be a morning better by the hour- glass than by the day's clearness. Sidney.
If a man be in sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it; for the mind doth value every moment. Bacon.
O, recollect your thoughts!
Shake not his hourglass, when his hasty hand
Is ebbing to the last. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.
We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrown great forces in the field. Bacon.
HO'URLY. adj. [from hour.] Happening or done every hour;
frequent; often repeated.
Aleyone
Computes how many nights he had been gone,
Observes the waining moon with hourly view,
Numbers her age, and wishes for a new. Dryden.
We must live in hourly expectation of having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us. Swift.
HO'URLY. adv. [from hour.] Every hour; frequently.
She deserves a lord.
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And hourly call her mistress. Shak. All's well that ends well.

Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies. Shakspere's Hamlet.
They with ceaseless cry
Surround me, as thou faw't; hourly conceiv'd,
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd,
Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd. Dryden.
HO'URPLATE. n. f. [hour and plate.] The dial; the plate on which the hours pointed by the hand of a clock are inscribed.
If eyes could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourplate, and thereby at a distance see what o'clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that acuteness.
HOUSE. n. f. [pur, Saxon; huys, Dutch; huise, Scottish.]
1. A place wherein a man lives; a place of human abode.
Sparrows must not build in his house caves. Shakspere.
Houses are built to live in, not to look on; therefore let use be preferred before uniformity, except where both may be had. Bacon, Essay 46.
In a house the doors are moveable, and the rooms square;
yet the house is neither moveable nor square. Watts.
2. Any place of abode.
The bees with smoke, the doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driven away. Shakspere.

have need of means of communication, which some make to be the celestial houses: those who are for the celestial houses worship the planets, as the habitations of intellectual substances that animate them. Stillington.
6. Family of ancestors, descendants, and kindred; race.
The red robe and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our driving houses. Shaksp. Henry VI.
An ignominious ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses; lawful mercy sure
Is nothing kin to foul redemption. Shak. Measure for Measure.
By delaying my last fine, upon your grace's accession to the patrimonies of your house, I may seem to have made a forfeiture. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.
A poet is not born in every race;
Two of a house few ages can afford,
One to perform, another to record. Dryden's Fables.

HOU

7. A body of the parliament; the lords or commons collectively considered.
Nor were the crimes objected against him so clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both houses, especially that of the lords. King Charles.
To HOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To harbour; to admit to residence.
Palladius wished him to house all the Helots, and make themselves masters of the gates. Sidney.

the house.
A very good house-dog, but a dangerous cur to strangers, had a bell about his neck. L'Estrange.
You see the goodness of the master even in the old house- dog. Addison's Spectator.
HOUSEHOLD. n. f. [house and hold.]
1. A family living together.
Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean. Shakspere.
A little kingdom is a great household, and a great household a little kingdom. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Of God observ'd
The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wondrous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. xi.
He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men, a peculiar household of his love, which at all times he has cherished as a father, and governed as a master: this is the proper household of faith; in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families. Spratt's Sermons.
Great crimes must be with greater crimes repaid,
And second funerals on the former laid;
Let the whole household in one ruin fall,
And may Diana's curse o'ertake us all. Dryden's Fables.
Learning's little household did embark,
With her world's fruitful system in her sacred ark. Swift.
In his own church he keeps a feast,
Says grace before and after meat;
And calls, without affecting airs,
His household twice a day to prayers. Swift.

unto them in the works of nature: this they honour and esteem highly as profound wisdom, howe'it this wisdom saveth them not. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.
There was no army transmitted out of England, howe'it the English colonies in Ireland did win ground upon the Irish. Devries on Ireland.
HOWE'YER. [Contracted from how do ye.] In what state is your health. A message of civility.
Years make men more talkative, but less writative; so that I now write no letters but of plain business, or plain howe'ys, to those few I am forced to correspond with. Pope.
HOWE'YER. adv. [how and ever.]
1. In whatsoever manner; in whatsoever degree.
This ring he holds
In most rich choice; yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
Howe'er repented of. Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.
To trace the ways
Of highest agents, deem'd howe'er wife. Milton's Par. Lof.
2. At all events; happen what will; at least.
Our chief end is to be freed from all, if it may be, howe'er from the greatest evils; and to enjoy, if it may be, all good, howe'er the chiefest. Villafon, Sermon 1.
3. Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet.
In your excuse your love does little say;
You might howe'er have took a fairer way.
Its views are bounded on all sides by several ranges of mountains, which are howe'er at so great a distance, that they leave a wonderful variety of beautiful prospects. Addis on Italy.
I do not build my reasoning wholly on the case of persecution, howe'er I do not exclude it. Auribury.
Few turn their thoughts to examine how those diseases in a state are bred, that hasten its end; which would, howe'er, be a very useful enquiry. Swift.
To HOWE'YER. v. n. [howe, Dutch; ulul, Latin.]
1. To cry as a wolf or dog.
Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howl'd in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise
I trembling wak'd. Shakespeare's Richard III.
If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key. Shakespeare.
He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Dante, xxxii. 10.
As when a sort of wolves infest the night,
With their wild howlings at fair Cynthia's light. Waller.
Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,
Fierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;
He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant scorns. Smith.
2. To utter cries in distress.
Therefore will I howl, and cry out for all Moab. Jer. xlviii.
The damned use that word in hell,
Howlings attend it. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
Each new morn
New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows
Strike heaven on the faces, that it rebounds
As if it felt with Scotland. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
The noise grows louder still:
Rattling of armour, trumpets, drums and ataballes;
And sometimes peals of shouts that rend the heav'ns;
Like victory: then groans again, and howlings
Like those of vanquish'd men. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
3. To speak with a belline cry or tone.
Peace, monster, peace! Go tell thy horrid tale
To furies, and howl it out in desarts!
Me would'st thou make the accomplice of thy crimes?
A. Phillips's Disfranch Mother.
Howl. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The cry of a wolf or dog.

HU

Murther,
Alarm'd by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
These and the like rumours are no more than the last howls of a dog dissected alive. Swift.
2. The cry of a human being in horror.
She raves, she runs with a distracted pace,
And fills with horrid howls the publick place. Dryden's Aen.
HOWSOF'EVER. adv. [how and soever.]
1. In what manner soever. See HOWE'YER.
Berofus, who, after Moses, was one of the most ancient, howsoever he hath been since corrupted, doth in the substance of all agree. Raleigh's History of the World.
2. Although.
The man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him.
Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.
To Hox. v. a. [from hox, Saxon.] To hough; to hamstring.
Thou art a coward,
Which boxes honesty behind, retraining
From courge required. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
Lodronius, perceiving the old soldier's meaning, alighted, and with his sword howl'd his horse, saying aloud, This day, valiant soldiers, shall you have me both your general and fellow soldier, fighting on foot as one of yourselves. Kneller.
Hov. n. f. [hou, old French.] A large boat sometimes with one deck.
He sent to Germany, strange aid to rear;
From whence effoons arrived here three boys
Of Saxons, whom he for his safety employs. Fairy Queen.
To define a barge and boy, which are between a boat and a ship, is hard. Watt's Logick.
HU'BBUB. n. f. [I know not the etymology, unless it be from up, or babbub.] A tumult; a riot.
People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or reckoning, but the actors were really of the dregs of the people. Clarendon.
An universal hubbub wild
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd,
Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
With loudest vehemence. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
Why wolves raise a hubbub at her,
And dogs howl when the furies in water. Hudibras, p. ii.
HU'CKABACK. n. f. A kind of linen on which the figures are raised.
HU'CKLEBACKED. adj. [hucker, German, a bunch, and back.]
Crooked in the shoulders.
HU'CKLEBONE. n. f. [from hucken, Dutch, to fit down.] The hipbone.
HU'CKSTER. } n. f. [huck, German, a pedlar; huckster, a she-HU'CKSTER. } pedlar.]
1. One who sells goods by retail, or in small quantities; a pedlar.
There cannot be a more ignominious trade than the being hucksters to such vile merchandise. Government of the Tongue.
God deliver the world from such guides, or rather such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion. South's Sermons.
Should thy thee wrench aside, down, down you fall,
And overturn the scolding huckster's stall,
The scolding huckster shall not o'er thee moan,
But pence expect for nuts and pears o'erthrown. Gay.
There should be a general confederacy of all the servants in every family, for the publick good, to drive those China huck- sters from the doors. Swift.
Those hucksters or money-jobbers will be found necessary, if this brass money is made current. Swift.
2. A trickish mean fellow.
Now the ape wanted his huckster man. Hubb. Tale.
To HU'CKSTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To deal in petty bargains.
They must pay a shilling, for changing their piece into filver, to some huckstering fellow who follows that trade. Swift.
To HU'CKLE. v. a. [probably from huck.]
1. To dress up close so as not to be discovered; to mobble.
2. To put on carelessly in a hurry.
At twelve the rose with much ado;
Her cloaths were huddl'd on by two. Prior.
Now all in haste they huddle on Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone. Swift.
3. To cover up in haste.
4. To perform in a hurry.
I have given much application to this poem: this is not a play huddl'd up in haste. Dryden.
When continu'd rain
The lab'ring husband in his house refrain,
Let him forecast his work with timely care,
Which else is huddl'd when the skies are fair. Dryd. Virgil.
5. To throw together in confusion.
Our adversary, huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion. Locke.

HUF

To HUFFLE. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurry.
Glance an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so buddled on his back,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shakespeare.
Brown answered after his blunt and buddling manner. Lucan.
Thyris, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
The budding brook to hear his madrigal,
And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale. Milton.
Their eyes are more imperfect than others; for they will run against things, and, budding forwards, fall from high places. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HUFFLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion.
That the Aristotelian philosophy is a buddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the custom of the wisest. Glanv.
Your carrying business in a buddle,
Has forc'd our rulers to new model. Hudibras, p. iii.
Nature doth nothing in a buddle. L'Estrange.
The understanding sees nothing distinctly in things remote,
and in a buddle. Locke.
Several merry answers were made to my question, which entertained us 'till bed-time, and filled my mind with a buddle of ideas. Addison's Spectator.
HUE. n. f. [from hue, Saxon.]
1. Colour; die.

For never in that land
Face of fair lady she before did view,
Or that dread lion's look her cast in deadly hue. Poetry 29.
For now three months have changed thrice their hue. Fairy Queen, canto viii.
To add another hue unto the rainbow,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shakespeare, King John.
Flowers of all hues, and without thorn the rose. Milton.
To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue, Answer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.
Your's is much of the camelion hue,
To change the die with distant view. Dryden.
2. [Hue, French.] A clamour; a legal pursuit; an alarm given to the country.
Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knights, I am undone:
Fly, run, hue and cry! villain, I am undone. Shakespeare.
Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road. L'Estrange.
If you should hiss, he swears he'll hiss as high;
And, like a culprit, join the hue and cry. Addison.
The hue and cry went after Jack, to apprehend him dead or alive, wherever he could be found. Arbutnot's John Bull.
HUEY. n. f. [huey, French, to cry.] One whose business is to call out to others.
They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a barker or huey, who stands on the cliff-side, and from thence directeth the course of the pilchard. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
HUFF. n. f. [from huff, or huff, Swedish: he is huffed up by discontenters. So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to leaven or ferment: huff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]
1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance.
Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word
To swear by only in a lord;
In others it is but a huff.
To vapour with instead of proof. Hudibras, p. ii.
His frowns kept multitudes in awe,
Before the bluster of whole huff.
All hats, as in a storm, flew off. Hudibras.
We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very huff of our greatness. L'Estrange.
A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the huff about his extraction.
No man goes about to ensnare or circumvent another in a passion, to lay trains, and give secret blows in a present huff. South's Sermons.
2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.
Lewd shallow-brained huffs make atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of wit. South.
As for you, colonel huff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater plotter. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
To HUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To swell; to puff.
In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the windpipe. Grew's Colours, Sec.
2. To heftor; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.
To HUFF. v. n. To bluster; to storm; to bounce; to swell with indignation or pride.
This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them. South.
A huffing, hissing, flatting, cringing coward.
A conkerworm of peace, was rais'd above him. Orway.
A thief and justice, fool and knave.
A huffing officer and slave. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.
Huffing to cowards, fawning to the brave,
To knaves a fool, to credulous fools a knave. Rescommen.

HUL

Now what's his end? O charming glory, say!
What, a fifth act to crown his huffing play? Dryden, Juvenal.
What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those huffing opinions they are swelled with. Locke.
When they received John's message, the huffed and stormed like the devil. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
HUFFER. n. f. [from huff.] A blusterer; a bully.

Nor have I hazarded my art,
To be expos'd 't' th' end to suffer,
By such a braggadocio huffer. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.
HUFFISH. adj. [from huff.] Arrogant; insolent; heftoring.
HUFFISHLY. adv. [from huffish.] With arrogant petulance;
with bullying bluster.

HUFFISHNESS. n. f. Petulance; arrogance; noisy bluster.
To HUG. v. a. [from hug, Saxon, to hedge, to inclose.]
1. To press close in an embrace.

He bewept my fortune,
And hug'd me in his arms. Shakespeare, Richard III.
What would not he do now to hug the creature that had given him so admirable a serenade! L'Estrange.
Even in that urn their brother they confess,
And hug it in their arms, and to their bosom press. Dryden.
King Xerxes was enamour'd upon an oak, which he would hug and kiss. Harvey on Conjunctions.

2. To fondle; to treat with tenderness.
I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unpleasible,
Win me into the easy-hearted man,
And hug him into flames. Milton.
We hug deformities, if they bear our names. Glanville.
Admire yourself.

And, without rival, hug your darling book. Rescommen.
Though they know that the flatterer knows the falsehood of his own flatteries, yet they love the impostor, and with both arms hug the abuse. South's Sermons.
Mark with what joy he hugs the dear discovery! Rowe.

3. To hold fast.
Age makes us most fondly hug and retain the good things of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying them. Athen.
HUG. n. f. [from the noun.] Close embrace.

Why these close hugs? I owe my flame to him. Gay.
HUGE. adj. [from hug, Dutch.]

1. Vast; immense.
Let the state of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford; and who sees not what huge difference there was between them? Hooker, b. iv.

This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalled in greatness not only Asia, Europe and Africa, but America. Athen.

2. Great even to deformity or terribleness.
The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder. Shakespeare.
Through forests huge, and long untroavell'd heaths,
With desolation brown he wanders wate. Thomson's Spring.

HUGELY. adv. [from huge.]
1. Immensely; enormously.

Who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea? Shakespeare, As you like it.

2. Greatly; very much.
I am hugely bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourselves in our affairs, it is for our good. Swift.

HUGENESS. n. f. [from huge.] Enormous bulk; greatness.
My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

HUGGERMUGGER. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from hug or mugger, or hug in the dark. Marker in Danish is darkness, whence our murky. It is written by Sir Thomas More, toke maker.
Hoker, in Chaucer, is peccish, crossgrained, of which moker may be only a ludicrous reduplication. Hoske is likewise in German a corner, and moky is in English dark. I know not how to determine.] Secrecy; by-place.

Now hold in huggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of goods and land. Habberd's Tale.

But if I can but find them out,
Where'er they be in huggermugger lurk,
I'll make them rue their handy-work. Hudibras, p. i.

There's a distinction betwixt what's done openly and barefaced, and a thing that's done in huggermugger, under a seal of secrecy and concealment. L'Estrange's Fables.

HUGY. adj. [See HUGE.] Vast; great; huge.
This hugy rock one finger's force
Apparently will move. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HUKE. n. f. [huque, French.] A cloak.
As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger in a rich huque. Bacon's New Atlantis.

HULK. n. f. [hulke, Dutch; pule, Saxon.]
1. The body of a ship.

There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold. Shakespeare.

2. The body of a man.

Who sat the nearest, by the words o'ercome,
Slept fast; the distant nodded to the hum. Pope's Dunciad.

The

HUM

The custom they had of giving the colour of the sea to the hulls, sails, and mariners of their spy-boats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti. Arbutnot.
They Argo's hulk will tax,
And scrape her pithy sides for wax. Swift.

The footy hulk. Thomson's Autumn.
Steer'd sluggish on.
This sense is still retained
In Scotland: as, a hulk of a fellow.

And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk fir John,
Is prisoner to your foun. Shakespeare's Henry IV, p. ii.

To HULK. v. a. To exenterate: as, to hulk a hare. Ainsw.
HULL. n. f. [Hulgan, Gothic, to cover.]
1. The hull or integument of any thing; the outer covering:
as, the hull of a nut covers the shell. [Hule, Scottish.]

2. The body of a ship; the hulk. Hull and hulk are now confounded; but hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.
So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the hull and tackle of a sensible and thinking creature.

3. To hull. v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sail or rudder.

They saw a fight full of piteous strangeness; a ship, or rather the carcass of the ship, or rather some few bones of the carcase, hulling there, part broken, part burned, and part drowned. Sidney.

Will you hoist sail, fir? here lies your way.
—No, good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer. Shak.

He look'd, and saw the ark hull on the flood,
Which now abated. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

People walking down upon the shore, saw somewhat come hulling toward them. L'Estrange.

HULLY. adj. [from hull.] Siliqueous; huffy.
HULLY. n. f. Holly.

Save bulwer and thorn, thereof sail for to make. Tusser.
To HUM. v. a. [humelen, Dutch.]

1. To make the noise of bees.
The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing. Bacon.

An airy nation flew,
Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew
In Summer's heat. Dryden's Zen, b. vi.

So weary bees in little cells repose;
But if night-robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waxen city grows. Dryden.

2. To make an inarticulate and buzzing sound.
I think he'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me. Shakespeare.

Upon my honour, fir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me. Shakespeare.

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, you'll rue. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. To pique in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.

Having pump'd up all his wit,
And humm'd upon it, thus he writ. Hudibras, p. iii.

I still acquiesce,
And never humm'd and haw'd sedition,
Nor flummied treason. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.

The man lay humming and having a good while; but, in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians. L'Estrange.

Still humming on, their drowsy course they keep,
And last'd so long, like tops, are last'd asleep. Pope.

4. To sing low.
The musical accents of the Indians, to us, are but inarticulate hummings; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs. Glanv. Apol.

Hum half a tune.
To applaud. Approbation was commonly express'd in publick assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.

HUM. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The noise of bees or insects.

To black Hecate's hummings
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,
To him who muses through the woods at noon. Thomson.

2. The noise of bustling crowds.
From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
The hum of either army stilly sounds. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Tower'd cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men. Milton.

One theatre there is of vast resort,
Which whilome of requests was call'd the court;
But now the great exchange of news 'tis high,
And full of hum and buzz from noon 'till night. Dryden.

3. Any low dull noise.
Who sat the nearest, by the words o'ercome,
Slept fast; the distant nodded to the hum. Pope's Dunciad.

HUM

4. A pause with an inarticulate sound.
These thrugs, these hums and haws,
When you have said the's goodly, come between,
'Ere you can say she's honest. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

Your excu's want some grains to make 'em current: hush and ha will not do the business. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. In Hudibras it seems used for ham.
And though his countrymen the Huns,
Did stew their meat between their hums,
And the horses backs o'er which they straddle,
And ev'ry man eat up his faddle. Hudibras, p. i. cant. i. i.

6. An expression of applause.
You hear a hum in the right place. Spectator.

HUM. interjct. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.
Let not your ears despite the heaviest found That ever yet they heard. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

—Hum! I guess at it. Pope.
See fir Robert—hum!
And never laugh for all my life to come.

HUMAN. adj. [humanus, Latin; humain, French.]
1. Having the qualities of a man.
It will not be asked whether he be a gentleman born, but whether he be a human creature. Swift.

2. Belonging to man.
The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakespeare.

For man to tell how human life began
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew? Milton's P. L.

Thee, serpent, subtil beast of all the field,
I knew; but not with human voice indu'd. Milton, Par. Lost.

Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any,
this being the highest of all human certainty. Locke.

HUMANE. adj. [humaine, French.] Kind; civil; benevolent; good-natured.

Love of others, if it be not spent upon a few, doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable. Bacon's Essays.

Envy, malice, covetousness and revenge are abolished: a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral, more humane, are planted in their stead. Spratt's Sermons.

HUMANELY. adv. [from humane.] Kindly; with good-nature.

If they would yield us the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely. Shakespeare.

HUMANIST. n. f. [humaniste, French.] A philologer; a grammarian.

HUMANITY. n. f. [humanité, French; humanitas, Latin.]
1. The nature of man.

Look to thyself; reach not beyond humanity. Sidney.
A rarer spirit never did steer humanity. Shakespeare.

The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.

To preserve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.

2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.
If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind by his informations. Glan.

3. Benevolence; tenderness.
All men ought to maintain peace, and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Locke.

How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,
And court the offices of soft humanity?
Like thee reserve their raiment for the naked,
Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,
Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep? Rowe.

4. Philology; grammatical studies.
To HUMANIZE. v. a. [humaniser, French.] To soften; to make susceptible of tenderness or benevolence.

Here will I paint the characters of woe,
And here my faithful tears in showers shall flow,
To humanize the flints whereon I tread.

Was it the business of magick to humanize our natures with compassion, forgiveness, and all the instances of the most extensive charity? Addison on the Christian Religion.

HUMANKIND. n. f. [human and kind.] The race of man; mankind.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd;
A knowledge both of books and humankind. Pope.

HUMANLY. adv. [from human.]
1. After the notions of men; according to the power of men.

Thus the present happy prospect of our affairs, humanly speaking, may seem to promise. Atterbury.

2. Kindly; with good-nature. This should be humanely.
Though learn'd, well bred; and though well bred, sincere;
Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

HUMBIRD. n. f. [from hum and bird.] The humming bird.
All ages have conceived the wren the least of birds, yet our own plantations have shewed us one far less; that is, the humbird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown's Vulg. Err.

HUMBLE. adj. [humilis, French; humilis, Latin.]
1. Not proud; modest; not arrogant.

And mighty proud to humble weak does yield. Fairy 29.
Now

HUM

Now we have shewn our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a doing. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Thy humble servant vows obedience,
And faithful service, 'till the point of death. Shak. H. VI.
We should be as humble in our imperfections and fins as Christ was in the fulness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect life. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
Chuse you for me; for well you understand
But if an humble husband may request,
Provide and order all things for the best. Dryden.
Ten thousand trifles light as these,
Nor can my rage nor anger move:
She should be humble, who would please;
And she must suffer, who can love. Prior.
2. Low; not high; not great.
Thy example of the heav'nly lark,
Above the skies let thy proud mulick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground.
Denied what ev'ry wretch obtains of fate,
An humble roof and an obscure retreat. Yalden.
Ah! prince, hadst thou but known the joys which dwell
With humbler fortunes, thou wouldest curse thy royalty. Rever.
Far humbler titles suit my loft condition.
To HUMBLE. v. a. [from the adjective].
1. To make humble; to make humiliative; to make to bow down with humility.
Take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues
Have humbled to all strokes. Shakefp. King Lear.
The executioner
Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon. Shakefp. As you like it.
Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you. 1 Pet. v. 6.
Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart. 2 Chro.
Why do I humble thus myself, and suing
For peace, reap nothing but repulse and hate. Milton.
Let the finner put away the evil of his doings, and humble himself by a speedy and sincere repentance: let him return to God, and then let him be assured that God will return to him. Rogers's Sermons.
2. To crush; to break; to subdue; to mortify.
Yearly injoin'd, some say, to undergo
This annual humbling certain number'd days,
To dash their pride, and joy, for man seduc'd. Milt. P. L.
We are pleased, by some implicit kind of revenge, to see him taken down and humbled in his reputation, who had so far raised himself above us. Addison's Spectator.
The mistress of the world, the seat of empire,
The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods,
That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth. Addis. Cato.
Men that make a kind of insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the publick tranquillity. Freeholder.
Fortune not much of humbling me can boast;
Though double tax'd, how little have I lost! Pope.
3. To make to condescend.
This would not be to condescend to their capacities, when he humbles himself to speak to them, but to lose his design in speaking. Locke.
4. To bring down from an height.
In process of time the highest mountains may be humbled into valleys; and again, the lowest valleys exalted into mountains. Hakewill on Providence.
HUMBLEBEE. n. f. [from hum and bee.] A buzzing wild bee.
The honeybags steal from the humblebees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs. Shakefp. As you like it.
This puts us in mind once again of the humblebees and the tinderboxes. Atterbury.
HUMBLEBEE. n. f. A herb. Ainsworth.
HUMBLEBEE EATER. n. f. A fly that eats the humblebee. Ainsw.
HUMBLENESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humility; ableness of pride.
With how true humbleness
They look'd down to triumph over pride! Sidney.
I am rather with all subjected humbleness to thank her excellencies, since the duty thereunto gave me rather heart to face myself, than to receive thanks for a deed which was her only inspiring. Sidney, b. i.
It was answered by us all, in all possible humbleness; but yet with a countenance, that we knew that he spoke it but merrily.
Bacon's New Atlantis.
A grain of glory, mixt with humbleness,
Cures both a fever and lethargickness. Herbert.
HUMBLER. n. f. [from humble.] One that humbles or subdues himself or others.
HUMBLEMOUTHED. adj. [from humble and mout.] Mild; meek.
You are meek and humblemouth'd, but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogance, spleen and pride. Shak. H. VIII.
HUMBLEPLANT. n. f. A species of sensitiveplant.
The humbleplant is so called because, as soon as you touch it,

HUM

it prostrates itself on the ground, and in a short time elevates itself again, is raised in hotbeds. Mortimer's Husbandry.
HUMBLESS. n. f. Entrails of a deer.
HUMBLESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humbleness; humility.
And with meek humbleness, and afflicted mood,
Pardon for thee, and grace for me intreat. Spenser.
HUMBLE. adv. [from humble.]
1. Without pride; with humility.
They were us'd to bend,
To fend their smiles before them to Achilles,
To come humbly as they us'd to creep to holy altars. Shakefp.
Here the tam'd Euphrates humbly glides,
And there the Rhine submits her swelling tides. Dryden.
Write him down a slave, who, humbly proud,
With presents begs preferments from the crowd. Dryden.
In midst of dangers, fears, and death,
Thy goodness I'll adore;
And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humbly hope for more. Addison's Spectator.
2. Without height; without elevation.
HUMDRUM. adj. [from hum, drone, or humming drone.] Dull;
dronish; stupid.
Shall we, quoth she, stand fill humdrum,
And see stout Bruin all alone,
By numbers basely overthrown?
I was talking with an old humdrum fellow, and, before I had heard his story out, was called away by business. Addison.
To HUMECT. v. a. [from humect, Latin; humect, Fr.]
To HUMECTATE. v. a. To wet; to moisten.
The Nile and Niger do not only moisten and temperate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and humectate
the earth by their annual inundations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Her rivers are wheeled up into small cataracts, and so divided into sluices, to humectate the bordering soil, and make it wonderfully productive. Hewel's Vocal Forest.
The medicaments are of a cool humecting quality, and not too much astringent. Welman's Surgery.
HUMECTATION. n. f. [from humectation, Fr. from humectate.] The act of wetting; moistening.
Plates of brass, applied to a blow, will keep it down from swelling; the cause is repercutum, without humectation, or entrance of any body. Bacon's Natural History.
That which is concreted by exsiccation, or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation, as earth and clay.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HUMERAL. adj. [from humeral, Fr. from humerus, Latin.] Belonging to the shoulder.
The largest crooked needle should be used, with a ligature, in taking up the humeral arteries in amputation. Sharp.
HUMICUBATION. n. f. [from hum and cubo, Latin.] The act of lying on the ground.
Fasting and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and humiliations, used to be companions of repentance. Eranbach.
HUMID. adj. [from humid, French; humidus, Lat.] Wet; moist; watery.
His there, with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers of more mingl'd hue.
Than her purpled scarlet can shew. Milton.
The queen, recover'd, rears her humid eyes,
And first her husband on the poop espies.
If they slip easily, and are of a fit lize to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opt.
HUMIDITY. n. f. [from humidus, Fr. from humid.] That quality which we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies. It differs very much from fluidity, de- ending altogether on the con-gruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quicksilver is not a moist liquor, in respect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to;
but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere. And even water itself, which wets almost every thing, and is the great standard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing; for it stands and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages, and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl. Quincy.
We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watry pumpion: we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakefp. As you like it.
O blessing-breeding fun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy sister's orb Infect the air. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and relifhing. Arbutnot on Diet.
HUMILIATION. n. f. [French.]
1. Descent from greatness; act of humility.
The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed upon the latter

HUM

latter an exaltation of that which was humiliated; for with power he created the world, but reformed it by obedience. Hooker, b. v. f. 55.
Thy humiliation shall exalt
With thee thy manhood also to this throne. Milt. Pa. Left.
Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.
John faced poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
With tears
Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milt. Pa. Left.
2. Abatement of pride.
It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the habits and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.
HUMILITY. n. f. [from humilitas, French.]
1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.
When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of confidence becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.
I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility. Shakefp. Richard III.
What the height of a king tempteth to revenge, the humility of a Christian teacheth to forgive. King Charles.
The humility of the style gained them many friends. Clarend.
There are some that use Humility to serve their pride, and seem Humble upon their way, to be the prouder
At their with'd journey's end. Denham's Sophy.
It is an easy matter, when there is no danger of a trial, to extol humility in the midst of honours, or to begin a fast after dinner. South's Sermons.
As high turrets, for their airy steep,
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot,
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lie,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.
2. Act of submission.
With these humilities they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avoided the present storm. Davies.
HUMMER. n. f. [from hum.] An applauder. Ainsworth.
HUMORAL. adj. [from humor.] Proceeding from the humours.
This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harvey on Consumptions.
HUMORIST. n. f. [from humorista, Italian; humoriste, French.]
1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; one who gratifies his own humour.
The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist. Spectator.
The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watts's Logic.
This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives a vast refuse of his superfluities to purchase heaven.
Addison's Spectator.
2. One who has violent and peculiar passions.
By a wife and timous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon's Villiers.
HUMOROUS. adj. [from humor.]
1. Full of grotesque or odd images.
Some of the commentators tell us, that Marfya was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the satire Marfyas, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.
Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot;
And penive, warring, melancholy,
Thou dread'st and hop'st thou know'st not what. Prior.
2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.
I am known to be a humorous patrician; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Thou fortune's champion, that do'st never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To teach thee safety. Shakefp. King John.
He's humorous as Winter, and as sudden
As faws congeal'd in the spring of days, Shakefp. Hen. IV.
O, you awake then: come away,
Times be short, are made for play;
The humorous moon too will not stay:
What doth make you thus delay?
Vast is his courage, boundless is his mind,
Rough as a storm, and humorous as the wind. Dryden.

HUM

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts's Logic.
3. Pleasant; jocular.
HUMOROUSLY. adj. [from humorous.]
1. Merrily; jocosely.
A cabinet of medals Juvenal calls, very humorously, con-cium argentum in titulos facie que minutas. Addison on Medals.
We resolve by halves, and unadvisedly; we resolve rashly, filly, or humorously, upon no reasons that will hold. Calamy.
It has been humorously said, that some have filled the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.
2. With caprice; with whim.
HUMOROUSNESS. n. f. [from humorous.] Fickleness; capricious levity.
HUMORSOME. adj. [from humor.]
1. Peevish; petulant.
2. Odd; humorous.
Our science cannot be much improved by masquerades, where the wit of both sexes is alto-gether taken up in continuing singular and humorous disguises. Swift.
HUMOROUSLY. adv. [from humorously.] Peevishly; petulantly.
HUMOUR. n. f. [from humour, French; humor, Latin.]
1. Moisture.
The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the peripicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.
2. The different kind of moisture in man's body, reckoned by the old physicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which, as they predominated, were supposed to determine the temper of mind.
Believe not these suggestions, which proceed
From anguish of the mind and humours black,
That mingle with thy fancy. Milton's Agonistes.
3. General turn or temper of mind.
As there is no humour, to which impudent poverty cannot make itself servicable; so were there enow of those of deperate ambition, who would build their houses upon others ruin. Sidney, b. ii.
There came with her a young lord, led higher with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whole goodness he sees not. Sidney.
King James, as he was a prince of great judgment, so he was a prince of a marvellous pleasant humour: as he was going through Lufen by Greenwich, he asked what town it was; they said Lufen. He asked, a good while after, what town is this we are now in? They said still it was Lufen: said the king, I will be king of Lufen. Bacon's Aphorisms.
Examine how your humour is inclin'd,
And which the ruling passion of your mind. Regemman.
They, who were acquainted with him, know his humour to be such, that he would never constrain himself. Dryden.
In cases where it is necessary to make examples, it is the humour of the multitude to forget the crime, and to remember the punishment. Addison's Freeholder.
Good humour only teaches charms to last,
Still makes new conquests, and maintains the past. Pope.
4. Present disposition.
It is the curse of kings to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break into the blood-house of life. Shakefp. K. John.
Another thought her nobler humour fed. Fairfax, b. ii.
Their humours are not to be won,
But when they are impos'd upon. Hudibras, p. iii.
Tempt not his heavy hand;
But one submissive word which you let fall,
Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.
5. Grotesque imagery; jocularly; merriment.
6. Diseased or morbid disposition.
He was a man frank and generous; when well, denied himself nothing that he had a mind to eat or drink, which gave him a body full of humours, and made his fits of the gout frequent and violent. Temple.
7. Petulance; peevishness.
Is my friend all perfection, all virtue and discretion? Has he not humours to be endured, as well as kindnesses to be enjoyed? South's Sermons.
8. A trick; a practice.
I like not the humour of lying: he hath wronged me in some humours: I should have born the humour'd letter to her.
Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
9. Caprice; whim; predominant inclination.
In private, men are more bold in their own humours; and in comfort, men are more obnoxious to others humours; therefore it is good to take both. Bacon's Essays.
To HUMOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To gratify; to soothe by compliance.
If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men;
if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow. Shakefp.
If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,
He should not humour me. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
Obedience

HUN

Obedience and subjection were never enjoined by God to humour the passions, luits, and vanities of those who are commanded to obey our governors. Swift.

You humour me, when I am sick;
Why not when I am fenetic?
Children are fond of something which strikes their fancy most, and fullen and regardless of every thing else, if they are not humoured in that fancy. Watts's Logick.

2. To fit; to comply with.
To after age thou shalt be writ the man,
That with smooth air couldst humour best our tongue. Milt.
'Tis my part to invent, and the musicians to humour that invention. Dryden's Preface to Albion.

Fountainbleau is situated among rocks and woods, that give a fine variety of savage prospects: the king has humoured the genius of the place, and only made use of so much art as is necessary to regulate nature. Addison's Guardian.

HUMP. n. f. [corrupted from bump. See BUMP.] The protuberance formed by a crooked back.

These defects were mended by succeeding matches; the eyes were opened in the next generation, and the bump fell.

HUMPHACK. n. f. [bump and back.] Crooked back; high shoulders.

The chief of the family was born with an humphack and very high nose. Tatler.

HUMPHACKED. adj. Having a crooked back.

To HUNCH. v. a. [hunch, German.]

1. Jack's friends began to hunch and push one another: why don't you go and cut the poor fellow down? Arbutnot.

2. [Hacker, a crooked back, German.] To crook the back.

Thy crooked mind within hunch'd out thy back,
And wander'd in thy limbs: to thy own kind
Make love, if thou canst find it in the world. Dryden.

HUNCHBACKED. adj. [hunch and back.] Having a crooked back.

His person deformed to the highest degree, flat-nosed, and hunchbacked. L'Estrange.

But I more fear Creon!
To take that hunchback'd monster in my arms,
Th' excrecence of a man. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

The second daughter was peevish, haggard, pale, with faucery-eyes, a sharp nose, and hunchbacked. Arbutnot. Hist. of F. Bell.

HUNDRED. adj. [pund, punpbe, Saxon; hunderd, Dutch.] The number consisting of ten multiplied by ten.

A bafe, proud, three suited, hundred pound, filthy, worsted stocking knave. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A hundred altars in her temple smoke,
A thousand bleeding hearts her pow'r invoke. Dryd. Æn.

Many thousands had seen the transactions of our Saviour, and many hundred thousands received an account of them from the mouths of those who were eye-witnesses. Addison.

HUNDRED. n. f.

1. A company or body consisting of an hundred.

Very few will take this proposition, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands, for an innate moral principle: whoever does so, will have reason to think hundreds of propositions innate. Locke.

Lands, taken from the enemy, were divided into centuries or hundreds, and distributed amongst the soldiers. Arbutnot.

2. A canton or division of a county, perhaps once containing an hundred manors. [Hundredum, low Latin; hundreds, old French.]

Imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loseth in the shire. Bacon.

For justice they had a bench under a tree, where Ket usually sat, and with him two of every hundred whence their companies had been raised: here complaints were exhibited. Hayw.

HUNDRETH. adj. [hundred, Saxon.] The ordinal of an hundred; the tenth ten times told.

We shall not need to use the hundredth part of that time, which themselves bestow in making invectives. Hooker.

If this medium is rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundredth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop any where. Newton's Opt.

HUNG. The preterite and part. pass. of hang.

A wife so hung with virtues, such a freight,
What mortal shoulders can support! Dryden's Juvenal.

A room that is richly adorned, and hung round with a great variety of pictures, strikes the eye at once. Watts.

HUNGER. n. f. [pungen, Saxon; honger, Dutch.]

1. Desire of food; the pain felt from fasting.

An uneasy sensation at the stomach for food. When the stomach is empty, and the fibres in their natural tension, they draw up to close as to rub against each other, so as to make that sensation: but when they are diffused with food, it is again removed; unless when a person fasteth so long as for want of spirits, or nervous fluid, to have those fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we say a person has fasted away his stomach; and this is occasioned by the attrition of the coats of the stomach against each other. Quincy.

Thou shalt serve thine enemies in hunger and in thirst. Deutr. xxviii. 48.

The sub-acid part of the animal spirits, being cast off by the lower nerves upon the coats of the stomach, vellicates the fibres, and thereby produces the sense we call hunger. Grew.

Something viscous, fat and oily, remaining in the stomach, destroys the sensation of hunger. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Any violent desire.

The immaterial felicities we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites and hungers for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Deay of Piety.

To HUNGER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel the pain of hunger.

Widely they gape, and to the eye they roar,
As if they hunger'd for the food they bore. Cowley.

2. To desire with great eagerness.

Do'st thou hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours,
Before thy hour be ripe? O, foolish youth,
Thou feel'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!

Stay but a little. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

My more having, would be as a fauce
To make me hunger more. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I content me,
And from the sting of famine fear no harm,
Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts that feed Me hungering more to do my father's will. Milton's P. Lost.

HUNGERBIT. } adj. [hunger and bit.] Pained or weak-

HUNGERBITTEN. } ened with hunger.

His strength shall be hungerbitten, and destruction shall be ready at his side. Job xviii. 12.

Thyself
Bred up in poverty and straits at home;
Lost in a desert here, and hungerbit. Milton's Parad. Reg.

HUNGERLY. adj. [from hunger.] Hungry; in want of nourishment.

His beard
Grew thin and hungerly, and seem'd to ask
His sops as he was drinking. Shakspeare's Taming of the Shrew.

HUNGERLY. adv. With keen appetite.

You have fav'd my longings, and I feed
Most hungerly on your sight. Shak. Timon of Athens.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,
They belch us. Shakespeare's Othello.

HUNGERSTARVED. adj. [hunger and starved.] Starved with hunger; pinched by want of food.

All my followers to th' eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,
Or lambs pursued by hungerstarved wolves. Shakspeare's H. VI.

O'erake me, if thou canst; I scorn thy strength;
Go, go, cheer up thy hungerstarved men. Shakspeare's H. VI.

As to some holy house th' afflicted came,
Th' hungerstarved, the naked, and the lame, Dryden.

Want and diseases, fled before her name,
Hungers do in a small degree nourish, and we see men an hungered love to smell hot bread. Bacon's Natural History.

HUNGRILY. adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,
Who pity'd suffering mortals long ago;
When on harsh acorns hungrily they fed,
And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread. Dryden's Juven.

HUNGRY. adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.

That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it; whereas hunger consists in that very sensation. Locke.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolific; more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.

Cassius has a lean and hungry look. Shakspeare's Jul. Cesar.

The more fat water will bear (asp best; for the hungry water doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon's Natural History.

In rusty grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Mortimer.

To this great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, for reaping the fruits that we here sow in the most hungry and barren soil. Smalbridge's Sermons.

HUNKS. n. f. [hunkur, fordid, Islandick.] A covetous fordid wretch; a miser; a curmudgeon.

The old hunks was well served, to be tricked out of a whole hog for the securing of his puddings. L'Estrange.

She has a husband, a jealous, covetous, old hunk. Dryden.

Irus has given all the intimations of being a close hunk, worth money. Addison's Spectator.

To

HUN

To HUNT. v. a. [puznian, Saxon, from hunte, a dogs.]

1. To chase wild animals.

The man that once did sell the lion's skin,
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him. Shak. H.V.

Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Job xxxviii. 39.

We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison's Spectator.

2. To pursue; to follow close.

Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Pf. cxi.

The heart strikes five hundred fort of pulses in an hour, and is hunted upon such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that faint would it break. Harvey on Consumptions.

3. To search for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Speiser.

All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from the principles it is pretended to be built upon: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.

He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison's Spectator.

To HUNT. v. n.

Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pack of hounds.

The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd
By sov'reign pow'r, her company disdain'd, Grinn'd at as they pass'd. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

2. A chase.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakspeare.

3. Pursuit.

I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

HUNTER. n. f. [from hunt.]

1. One who chases animals for pasture.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, bogs, and woods within the limits of forests, chaces and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Davies on Ireland.

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milt. Par. Lost.

Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden's Æn.

This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a palimpsest of Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron. Addison on Italy.

Bold Nimrod first the savage chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

2. A dog that hunts game or beasts of prey.

Of dogs, the val'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eyes, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy hunter's names, that my full life doth sway. Shakspeare.

Shall I call
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?

Hence had the hunter's Dian her dread bow, Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste. Milton.

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal hunter's, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope's Windsor Forest.

Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder; but at the same time he describes her as a hunter's. Breeme.

HUNTERMAN. n. f. [hunt and man.]

Your cataracts and hurricanes ſpout. Shakeſp. K. Lear.
A ſtorm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a ſtrange havoc where it comes. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays ſtark raging mad: all was tempeſtuous and blustering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden's Duſſelſing.

The miniſters of ſtate, who gave us law,
In corners with ſeleſted friends withdraw;
There, in deaf murmurs, ſolemnly are wiſe,
Whiſp'ring like winds, ere hurricanes ariſe. Dryden.
So, where our wide Numidian waſtes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes deſcend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the ſands, and ſweep whole plains away. Addiſon.

HYD

Sore pierc'd by wintry wind,
How many shrink into the fordid but
Of cheerless poverty. Thomson.
HUTCH. n. f. [hyæcca, Saxon; huche, French.] A corn chest.
The best way to keep them, after they are threshed, is to dry them well, and keep them in hutches, or close casks. Mort.
To Huzz. v. n. [from the found.] To buzz; to murmur.
HUZZA. interj. A shout; a cry of acclamation.
The buzzes of the rabble are the same to a bear that they are to a prince. L'Estrange.
It was an unfair thing in you to keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me day and night, with buzzes and hunting horns never let me cool. Arbutnot on Dist.
All fame is foreign, but of true desert;
Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart:
One self-approving hour whole years outweighs
Of stupid flatters and of loud buzzes. Pope's Essay on Man.
To Huzza. v. n. [from the interjection.] To utter acclamation.
A caldron of fat beef, and floop of ale,
On the buzzsing mob shall fill prevail. King's Cookery.
To Huzza. v. a. To receive with acclamation.
He was buzzed into the court by several thousands of weavers and clothiers. Addison.
HYACINTH. n. f. [hyacinthos, Gr.; hyacinthe, Fr. hyacinthus, Lat.]
1. A plant.
It hath a bulbous root: the leaves are long and narrow: the stalk is upright and naked, the flowers growing on the upper part in a spike: the flowers consist each of one leaf, are naked, tubulose, and cut into six divisions at the brim, which are reflexed: the ovary becomes a roundish fruit with three angles, which is divided into three cells, which are filled with roundish seeds. Miller.
The filken fleece, impurpl'd for the loom,
Rival'd the hyacinth in vernal bloom. Pope's Odyssey.
2. The hyacinth is the same with the lapis hyacinthus of the ancients. It is a less fleshy gem than any of the other red ones, but not without its beauty, though not gaudy. It is seldom smaller than a seed of hemp, or larger than a nutmeg. It is found of various degrees of deepness and paleness; but its colour is always a deadish red, with a considerable admixture of yellow, which even sometimes seems predominant: but its most usual is that mixed red and yellow, which we know by the name of flame-colour. This gem is found in several parts of Europe; but the finest sort comes from the East and West Indies. Hill on Gems.
HYACINTHINE. adj. [hyacinthinus, Gr.] Made of hyacinths.
HYADES. n. f. [hyades, Gr.] A watery constellation.
HYADS. n. f. [hyades, Gr.] A watery constellation.
Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name
For ev'ry fix'd and ev'ry wand'ring star;
The pleiads, hyads. Dryden's Georgicks.
HYALINE. adj. [hyalinus, Gr.] Glassy; crystalline; made glass;
resembling glass.
From heav'n-gate not far, founded in view
On the clear hyaline, the glassy sea. Milton's Parad. Lost.
HYBRIDOUS. adj. [hybridus, Latin.] Begotten between animals of different species.
Why such different species should not only mingle together, but also generate an animal, and yet that that hybridous production should not again generate, is to me a mystery. Ray.
HYDATIDES. n. f. [from hyda, Gr.] Little transparent bladders of water in any part: most common in dropical persons, from a distention or rupture of the lymphducts; for they happen most in parts abounding with those vessels. Quincy.
All the water is contained in little bladders, adhering to the liver and peritoneum, known by the name of hydatides. W. Sem.
HYDRA. n. f. [hydra, Latin.] A monster with many heads slain by Hercules: whence any multiplicity of evils is termed a hydra.
New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false North displays
Her broken league to imp her serpent wings. Milton.
More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron-teeth severely grin. Dryden's Æn.
Subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew. Dryden.
HYDRAGOGUES. n. f. [hydragogus, Gr.] Such medicines as occasion the discharge of watery humours, which is generally the case of the stronger catharticks, because they shake most forcibly by their vellations the bowels and their appendages, so as to squeeze out water enough to make the fruits seem to be little else. Quincy.
HYDRAULICAL. adj. [from hydraulick, Gr.] Relating to the construction of engines. Derham's Physico-Theology.
Among the engines in which the air is useful, pumps may be accounted not contemptible ones, and divers other hydraulic engines.
We have employed a virtuoso to make an hydraulick engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastic channels. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.
HYDRAULICKS. n. f. [hydraulics, Gr.] Hydraulics, a pipe.]

HYG

The science of conveying water through pipes or conduits.
HYDROCELE. n. f. [hydrocele, Gr.] A watery rupture.
HYDROCEPHALUS. n. f. [hydrocephalus, Gr.] A dropical in the head.
A hydrocephalus, or dropical of the head, is only incurable when the serum is extravasated into the ventricles of the brain. Arbutnot on Dist.
HYDROGRAPHY. n. f. [hydrographia, Gr.] A marriage song.
One who draws maps of the sea.
It may be drawn from the writings of our hydrographer.
HYDROGRAPHY. n. f. [hydrographia, Gr.] A marriage song.
Description of the watery part of the terraqueous globe.
HYDROMANCY. n. f. [hydromancy, Gr.] A marriage song.
Prediction by water.
Divination was invented by the Persians: there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy. Hylyff's Parergon.
HYDROMEL. n. f. [hydromel, Gr.] Honey and water.
Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern part of Europe allows, as well as one of the most ancient. Montimer's Hush.
In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates were pistans and cream of barley; hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium. Arbutnot.
HYDROMETER. n. f. [hydrometer, Gr.] An instrument to measure the extent of water.
HYDROMETRY. n. f. [hydrometry, Gr.] The art of measuring the extent of water.
HYDROPHOBIA. n. f. [hydrophobia, Gr.] Dread of water.
Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the dread of water is the most remarkable. Quincy.
HYDROPHOBIC. adj. [hydrophobicus, Gr.] Dread of water.
Cantharides heats the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydrophobic water. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The world's whole sap is sunk:
The general balm th' hydrophobic hath drunk;
Whither, as to the bedfret, life is shrunk,
Dead and inter'd. Donne.
Some mens hydrophobic insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.
Hydrophobic swellings, if they be pure, are pellucid. W. Sem.
Every lust is a kind of hydrophobic distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tillotson's Sermon.
Hydrophobic wretches by degrees decay,
Growing the more, the more they waste away;
By their own ruins they augmented lye,
With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry. Blackmore.
One sort of remedy he uses in dropicals, viz. the water of the hydrophobic, which is a remedy for the distemper. Arbutnot.
HYDROSTATICAL. adj. [hydrostaticus, Gr.] Relating to hydrostatics; taught by hydrostatics.
A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be recon-cilable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above; because bone, the heaviest in species, will be ever in the midst. Bentley.
HYDROSTATICALLY. adv. [hydrostatically, Gr.] According to hydrostatics.
The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically, doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mass. Bentley's Sermon.
HYDROSTATICS. n. f. [hydrostatics, Gr.] A science of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.
HYDROSTICK. n. f. [hydrostick, Gr.] Purger of water or phlegm.
He seems to have been the first who divided purges into hydrosticks and purgers of bile. Arbutnot on Dist.
HYENA. n. f. [hyena, French; hyena, Latin.] An animal like hyena. A wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.
I will weep when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyena, when you are inclined to sleep. Shakespeare.
A wonder more amazing would we find;
The hyena flows it, of a double kind:
Varying the sexes in alternate years,
In one begets, and in another bears. Dryden's Fables.
The hyena was indeed well joined with the beaver, as having also a bag in those parts, by thereby we understand the hyena odorata, or civet cat. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects. Shakespeare.
Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,
Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules controll'd;
Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,
They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight. Granv.
The common people understand rallery, or at least rheto-rick, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense. Swift.

HYP

HYLARCHICAL. adj. [hylarchus, Gr.] Prefiding over matter.
HYM. n. f. A species of dog.
Hym, you curs!
Mafliff, greyhound, mungri grim,
Hound or spaniel, brache or hym;
Or bobtail tike, or trundle tail,
Tom will make him weep and wail. Shakespeare. King Lear.
HYMEN. n. f. [hymen, Gr.]
1. The god of marriage.
2. The virginal membrane.
HYMENEAL. n. f. [hymeneus, Gr.] A marriage song.
HYMENEAN. n. f. [hymeneus, Gr.] A marriage song.
And heav'nly choirs the hymenean sung. Milt. Par. Lost.
For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;
For her white virgins hymeneals sing. Pope.
HYMENEAL. adj. Pertaining to marriage.
The fultors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice
A signal of her hymeneal choice. Pope's Odyssey.
HYMN. n. f. [hymn, Gr.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superior being.
As I earst, in praise of mine own dame,
So now in honour of thy mother dear,
An honourable hymn I like should frame. Spenser.
Our solemn hymns to fallen dirges change;
Our bridal flow'rs serve for a buried carcase. Shakespeare.
When steel grows
Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made
An overture for the wars. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour. Bacon.
Farewell, you happy shades,
Where angels first should practise hymns, and string
Their tuneful harps, when they to heav'n would sing. Dryd.
To HYMN. v. a. [hymen, Gr.] To praise in song; to worship with hymns.
To HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.
They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton.
He had not left alive this patient faint,
This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence
To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,
And hymn it in the quire. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
HYMNICK. adj. [hymnicus, Gr.] Relating to hymns.
He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.
To HYP. v. a. [hyperbolus, Gr.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.
I have been, to the last degree, hyperbolus I saw you. Speet.
HYPERALLAGE. n. f. [hyperallage, Gr.] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.
HYPER. n. f. [hyper, Gr.] A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick. A hypercritick; one more critical than necessary critics. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.
Criticks I read on other men,
And hypers upon them again. Prior.
HYPERBOLA. n. f. [hyperbole, Gr. ὑπερβολή, Lat.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolical section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex. Harris.
Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolas, very eccentric. Bentley's Sermon.
HYPERBOLE. n. f. [hyperbole, Gr. ὑπερβολή, Lat.] A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: as, he runs faster than lightning. His passions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellat was a mansion for him. Shakespeare.
Terms unquar'd,
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seem hyperboles. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
Taffata phrases, filken terms precise,
Three pill'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantic, these Summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shakespeare.
They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects. Glanv. Sceps. c. 1.
Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,
Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules controll'd;
Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,
They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight. Granv.
The common people understand rallery, or at least rheto-
rick, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense. Swift.

HYP

HYPERBOICAL. adj. [hyperbolique, French; from hyper- hyperbo, Gr.]
1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.
Cancelled in the middle with squares, with triangles before, and behind with hyperbolick lines. Grew's Museum.
The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a hill-lock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure. Ray on the Creation.
2. [From hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.
It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolical, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense. Boyle.
HYPERBOICALITY. adv. [from hyperbolical.]
1. In form of an hyperbola.
2. With exaggeration or extenuation.
Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically. Brown.
Scylla is fetted upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbolically described by Homer as inaccessible. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.
HYPERBOICALIFORM. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.
HYPERBOICAN. n. f. [hyperborean, French; hyperboreus, Lat.]
Northern.
HYPERCRITICK. n. f. [hypercritique, Fr. ὑπερκριτική, Gr.]
A critick exact or captious beyond use or reason.
Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges of antiquity, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages. Dryd.
HYPERCRITICAL. adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond necessity or use.
We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical puntillos, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to. Evelyn.
Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner. Swift.
HYPERMETER. n. f. [hypermetre, Gr.] Any thing greater than the standard requires.
When a man rises beyond six foot, he is an hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club. Addison's Guardian.
HYPERMETER. n. f. [hypermetre, Gr. ὑπερμέτρος, Gr.]
The growth of fungus or proud flesh.
Where the hypermetre was great, I sprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more speedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction. W. Semant's Surgery.
HYPHEN. n. f. [hyphen, Gr.] A note of conjunction; as, vir-tue, ever-living.
HYPOCRIT. n. f. [hypocrite, Gr.] Any medicine that induces sleep.
HYPOCHONDRES. n. f. [hypochondria, Gr. ὑποχόνδριον, Gr.] The two regions lying on each side the cartilago costiformis, and those of the ribs, and the tip of the breast, which have in one the liver, and in the other the spleen. Quincy.
The blood moving too slowly through the celiac and mesenterick arteries, produce various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondres; from whence such persons are called hypochondriack. Arbutnot on Aliments.
HYPOCHONDRIACAL. adj. [hypochondriacus, French, from hypochondria, Gr.]
1. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination.
Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Dancy of Piety.
2. Producing melancholy.
Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected;
as in great fears, and hypochondriack passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon's Nat. History.
HYPOCRIST. n. f. [hypocrite, Gr. ὑποκριτής, Gr.]
Hypocrite is an insipidated juice in large flat masses, considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. It is brought from the Levant, sometimes from France, and other parts of Europe. The stem of the plant, from which it is produced, is thick and fleshy; and, what is singular, much thicker at the top than towards the bottom.
The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, which are garthered before they are ripe; and the juice is expressed, then evaporated over a gentle fire, formed into cakes, and dried in the sun. It is an astringent medicine of considerable power.
Hill's Mat. Med.
HYPOCRISY. n. f. [hypocrisis, Fr. hypocrisie, Gr.] Dissimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.
Next flood hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden's Fables.
Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint:
men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private. Swift.
HYPOCRITE. n. f. [hypocrite, French; ὑποκριτής, Gr.] A dissimuler in morality or religion. Swift.

HYP

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shak.
A wife man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Ecclesi. xxxiii. 3.
Fair hypocrites, you seek to cheat in vain;
Your silence argues, you ask time to reign. Dryden.
The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.
Beware, ye honest: the third circling glass
Suffices virtue: but may hypocrites,
Who sily speak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unwar'd drink on,
And through intemperance grow a while sincere. Phillips.
HYPOCRITICAL. adj. [from hypocrite.] Dissembling; insinuating.
HYPOCRITICK. s. cere; appearing differently from the reality.
Now you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical, down-cast look. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be esteemed an hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine. Roger's Sermon.
Let others skew their hypocritical face.
HYPOCRITICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation; without sincerity; falsely.
Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, may hypocritically, abusing at once their profelytes and their religion. Government of the Tongue.
HYPOCASTRICK. adj. [from hypocastrike, French; ὑποκαστρίκ.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.
The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypocaustic arteries. Weseman's Surgery.
HYPOGÆUM. n. s. [from ὑπο and γῆ.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.
HYPOSTASIS. n. s. [from ὑποστασις, French; ὑποστασις.]
1. Distinct substance.
2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.
The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those before comprised in the ancient more simple article. Hammond on Fundamentals.
HYPOSTATICAL. adj. [from hypostatique, French, from hypostasis.]
1. Constitutive; constituent as distinct ingredients.
Let our Carnaeas warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chymists, touching their three hypostatical principles, till they have a little examined it. Boyle.
2. Personal; distinctly personal.
HYPOTEUSE. n. s. [from ὑποτευσε, Fr. ὑποτευσε.] The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle; the subtense.
The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

HYS

HYPOTHESIS. n. s. [from ὑποθεσις, Fr. hypothese.] A supposition; a system formed upon some principle not proved.
The mind casts and turns itself reflexly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole intelligible. South's Sermon.
With imagin'd sovereignty
Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns:
He reigns: how long? 'till some usurper rise;
And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wise,
Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. Prior.
HYPOTHETICAL. adj. [from hypothetique, Fr. from hypothese.] Including a supposition; conditional.
Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move. Watts's Logic.
HYPOTHETICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition; conditionally.
The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubts, and hypothetically. Bryant's Notes to Pope's Odyssey.
HYST. s. Are all from the Saxon hyst, a wood or grove. Gloss.
HYST. s.
HYSSOP. n. s. [from ὑσσωπος, Fr. hyssopus, Lat. hyssopus.] A verticillate plant, with long narrow leaves: the crest of the flower is roundish, erect, and divided into two parts: the beard is divided into three parts; the middle part is hollowed like a spoon, having a double point, and is somewhat winged: the whorles of the flowers are short, and at the lower part of the stalk are placed at a great distance; but toward the top are closer joined, so as to form a regular spike. It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in Scripture. Müller.
The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyssop; for that is not the leaf of vegetables observed to grow upon walls; but rather some kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and stony places. Braun.
HYSTERICAL. adj. [from hysterique, French; ὑστερικὸς.]
HYSTERIC. s.
1. Troubled with fits; disordered in the regions of the womb.
In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike such an astonishment upon spectators, that they report them possessed with the devil. Harvey on Consumption.
Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb. Player on the Humours.
2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.
Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
Who gave th' hysterick or poetick fit. Pope's Rape of the Lock.
This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit. Arbuthnot and Pope's Rape of the Lock.
HYSTERICUS. n. s. [from ὑστερικὸς.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

I.

JAC

Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.
I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked by an e final; and a short sound, as fin, thin.
Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, as: thus field, yield, are spoken as fiel, yeild; except friend, which is spoken frend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fall, naigh; and to o makes a long diphthong, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the English language, as oil, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word, is always expressed by y.
The consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant; as jade, jet, jilt, jolt, just.
I. pronoun personal. [It, Gothic; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch.]
I, gen. me; plural we; gen. us.
Ic, me; we, us.
1. The pronoun of the first person, myself.
I do not like these several councils, I. Shaksp. Rich. III.
There is none greater in this house than I. Gen. xxxix. 9.
Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid. Mat. xiv. 27.
What shall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own?
I shall like beasts or common people dye,
Unless you write my elegy.
Hence, and make room for me.
When chance of business parts us two,
What do our souls, I wonder, do?
Of that book you have given us a large earnest.
Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain,
I to my longing friends return again. Dryden's Æn.
2. Me is in the following passage written for I.
There is but one man whom the can have, and that is me. Clarissa.
3. I is more than once in Shakespeare written for ay, or yes.
Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I,
And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice. Shakespeare.
Did your letters pierce the queen?
—I, sir; the took 'em and read 'em in my presence,
And now and then an ample rear trill'd down. Shakespeare.
To JABBER. v. n. [from jabber, Dutch.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.
We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties. Swift.
JA'BERER. n. s. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticulately or unintelligibly.
Out cant the Babylonian labourers
At all their dialects of jabberers. Hudibras, p. iii.
JA'CENT. adj. [from jacens, Latin.] Lying at length.
So laid, they are more apt in swagging down to pierce than in the ja-cent posture. Watson's Architect.
JACINTH. n. s. [for hyacinth, as Jerusalem for Hierusalem.]
1. The same with hyacinth.
2. A gem of a deep redish yellow approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber. Woodward's Met. Pass.
JACK. n. s. [Probably by mistake from Jaques, which in French is James.]
1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for saucy or palsy fellows.
I am in estimation:
You will perceive that a Jack gardant cannot Office me from my son Coriolanus. Shakespeare.
I have in my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
Every Jack slave hath his belly-full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match. Shaksp.
2. The name of instruments which supply the place of a boy, as an instrument to pull off boots.

JAC

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their matters boots; but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks. Watts's Logic.
3. An engine which turns the spit.
The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square; that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the spindles; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm. Moxon.
The ordinary jack, used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth be never so smooth, yet, if not oiled, will hardly move. Ray.
A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Weseman's Surgery.
Some strain in rhyme; the muses on their racks Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks. Pope.
4. A young pike.
No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer's Husbandry.
5. [Jaques, French.] A coat of mail.
The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.
6. A cup of waxed leather.
Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy mapple cup. Dryden's Pers.
7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.
'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byass, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and so run spontaneously to the jack. Bentley's Sermons.
8. A part of the musical instrument called a virginal.
In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth. Bacon's Natural History.
9. The male of animals.
A jack ass, for a stallion, was bought for three thousand two hundred and twenty-nine pounds three shillings and four pence. Arbuthnot on Coins.
10. A support to saw wood on.
11. The colours or ensign of a ship. Answorth.
12. A cunning fellow who can turn to any thing.
Jack of all trades, shew and found;
An inverse burle, an exchange under ground. Cleaveland.
JACK BOOTS. n. s. [from jack, a coat of mail.] Boots which serve as armour to the legs.
A man on horseback, in his breeches and jack boots, dressed up in a commodore and a night-rail. Spectator.
JACK BY THE HEDGE. n. s. An herb.
Jack by the hedge is an herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other fallads are, and much used in broth. Mortimer.
JACK PUDDING. n. s. [from jack and pudding.] A zani; a merry Andrew.
Every jack pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover. L'Estrange.
A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the dish they like best: in French jean pottage, and in English jack pudding. Guardian.
Jack pudding, in his party-colour'd jacket,
Tosses the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packet. Guy.
JACK WITH A LANTERN. An ignis fatuus.
JACKAL'S EYE. n. s. [from Jack in Lent, a poor starved fellow.] A simple sheepish fellow.
You little jackal's, have you been true to us?
—Ay, I'll be sworn. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
JACKAL. n. s. [from chacal, French.] A small animal supposed to start prey for the lion.
The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chafe-guns through our sterns they send;
Close by their fireships, like jackals, appear,
Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.
The

JAI

The mighty lion, before whom stood the little jackal, the faithful spy of the king of beasts. Arbut. and Pope's M. Scrib.
JACKANAPES. n. f. [jack and ape.]
 1. Monkey; an ape.
 2. A cockcomb; an impertinent.

—That jackanapes with fears. Shakep.

 2. Staff concealing a dagger.

JACOBINE. n. f. A pigeon with a high tuft. Ainsworth.

JACTITATION. n. f. [jaclita, Latin.] Tossing; motion; restlessness; heaving.

If the patient be surpris'd with jactitation, or great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials. Harv.
JACULATION. n. f. [jaculatio, jacular, Latin.] The act of throwing missile weapons.

So hills amid' the air encounter'd hills,
 Hurl'd down and fro' with jaculation dire. Milt. Parad. Lost.
JADE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from goad, a goad, or spur.]

1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag.
 Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!
 I am as dull as Winter-starved sheep,
 Tir'd as a jade in overladen cart. Sidney.

When they should endure the bloody spur,
 They fall their crest, and like deceitful jades, Sink in the cryal. Shakep. Julius Caesar.

The horsemen fit like fixed candlesticks,
 With torches in their hand; and their poor jades
 Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips. Shakep.

To other regions
 France is a stale, we that dwell in't jades;
 Therefore to th' war. Shakep. All's well that ends well.

So have I seen with armed heel
 A wight beset a commonweal,
 While still the more he kick'd and spur'd,
 The less the fullen jade has stir'd. Hudibras, p. i.

The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with him. L'Estrange.

False steps but help them to renew their race,
 As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace. Pope.
 2. A forry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.

Shall these, these old jades, pass the flower
 Of youth, that you have, pass you. Chapman's Iliads.
 But she, the cunning jade alive,
 Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive,
 By sharing female bounties. Stepney.

Get in, hussy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southern's Innocent Adultery.
 In di'monds, pearl, and rich brocades,
 She shines the first of batter'd jades,
 And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.
 You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Add.
JADE. n. f. A species of stone.

The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale bluish grey, or ashy-colour, and a pale green, not simple and uniform, but intermixed. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant and high polish. It is found in the East Indies, and is much used by the Turks for handles of sabres. It is so highly esteemed by the Indians as to be called the divine stone: they wear it externally as a remedy for the gravel, and an amulet to preserve them from the bite of venomous animals. Hill's Materia Medica.

To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary.
 With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
 The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
 We've jaded out o' th' field. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.

JAI

It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon's Essay.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast,
 No favour for the stallion we retain,
 And no respect for the degen'rate strain. Dryden's Juvenal.

The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Latta.
 There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; or upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation. Watts's Logic.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.
 If we live thus tamely,
 To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
 Farewell nobility. Shakep. Henry VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.
 The honourable blood
 Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shakep. Hen. VI.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.
 I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me; for every reason excites to this. Shakep. Twelfth Night.

To JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.
 Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. Smith's Sermon.

JADISH. adj. [from jade.]
 1. Vicious; bad; as an horse.
 That hors'd us on their backs, to show us
 A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Hudibras, p. iii.

When once the people get the jadish trick
 Of throwing off their kings, no ruler's safe. Southern.
 2. Unchaste; incontinent.

'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest. L'Estrange.

To JAGG. v. a. [gagaw, hits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.
 Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon's Natural History.

The jagging of pinks and gilliflowers is like the inequality of oak-leaves; but they never have any small plain parts. Bac.
 The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bent.

An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watts.
JAGG. n. f. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jagged or scallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray.
 Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jagged in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible. Mort. Husbandry.

JAGGY. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.
 His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold;
 His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold;
 Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes;
 His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Addison.

Amid' those angles, infinitely strain'd,
 They joyful leave their jaggy salts behind. Thomson's Autumn.

JAGGEDNESS. n. f. [from jagg.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.
 First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain with your coal or lead, before you give them their veins or jaggedness. Peacoch on Drawing.

JAIL. n. f. [geol, French.] A goal; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him. Shakep.
 A dependant upon him paid six pound ready money, which, poor man, he liv'd to repent in a jail. Clarendon.

He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew
 'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.
 One jail did all their criminals restrain,
 Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain. Dryden.

JAILBIRD. n. f. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.
JAILER. n. f. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.
 Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunn'd it, feeling and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jailer. Sidney.

This is as a jailer, to bring forth
 Some monstrous malefactor. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 His power to hollow caverns is confin'd;
 There let him reign, the jailer of the wind;
 With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,
 And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden's En.

Palamon, the prisoner knight,
 Restless for woe, arose before the light;
 And with his jailer's leave, desir'd to breathe
 An air more wholesome than the damp beneath. Dryden.

JAKES.

JAR

JAKES. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology.] A house of office.
 I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shakep. King Lear.

Their fordid avarice rakes
 In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden's Juvenal.
 Some have fill'd the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JALAP. n. f. [jalap, French; jalepium, low Latin.]
 No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the forefide of the chimney jalep, which is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It was not known in Europe 'till after the discovery of America, and had its name jalepium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative in all cases where ferous humours are to be evacuated. Hill's Mat. Med.

JAM. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

JAMB. n. f. [jamba, French.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the forefide of the chimney jamb. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
JAMBICK. n. f. [iambique, French; iambicus, Latin.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately; used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
 It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies:
 Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
 In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

To JANGLE. v. n. [jangler, French. Skinner.] To altercation; to quarrel; to bicker in words.
 Good wits will be jangling; but, gentiles agree,
 This civil war of wits were much better us'd
 On Navarre and his book-men. Shak. Love's Labour Lost.

So far am I glad it did do fort,
 As this jangling esteem a sport. Shakep.
 There is no error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling. Raleigh.

To JANGLE. v. a. To make to sound untuneably.
 Now see that noble and that sovereign reason,
 Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh. Shak. Haml.

'Ere Gothic forms were known in Greece,
 And in our verse 'ere monkish rhimes
 Had jangle'd their fantastic chimes. Prior.

JANGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

JANIZARY. n. f. [A Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.
 His grand visier, presuming to invest
 The chief imperial city of the West,
 With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;
 The standards lost, and janizaries slain,
 Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.

JANNOCK. n. f. [probably a corruption of bancock.] Oat-bread. A northern word.

JANTY. adj. [corrupted from gentil, French.] Showy; flustering.
 This sort of woman is a janty flatterer: she hangs on her cloaths, plays her head, and varies her posture. Speator.

JANUARY. n. f. [januarius, Latin.] The first month of the year, from janus, to whom it was among the Romans consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying providence. Peacoch.

JAPAN. n. f. [from japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush. Swift.
 To JAPAN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.
 For not the desk with silver nails,
 Nor bureau of expence,
 Nor standish well japan'd, avails
 To writing of good sense. Swift.

2. To black shoes. A low phrase.
 The god of fire
 Among these gen'rous presents joins his part,
 And aids with foot the new japaning art. Gay's Trivia.

JAPANER. n. f. [from japan.]
 1. One skilled in japan work.
 2. A shoeblack.

The poor have the same itch;
 They change their weekly bar, weekly news,
 Prefer a new japaner to their shoes. Pope's Horace.

To JAR. v. n. [from comp, anger, Saxon; or guerre, war, French; or garren, old Teutonic, to clamour.]
 1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.
 A hollow groan, a murr'ring wind arose;

JAS

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
 Sent out a jarring found, and harshly rung. Dryden.
 My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.

2. To strike or sound untuneably.
 O, you kind gods!
 Cure this great breach in his abused nature:
 Th' untun'd and jarring fenses, O, wind up,
 Of this child-changed father. Shakep. King Lear.

I perceive you delight not in music.
 —Not a whit, when it jars so. Shakep.
 A firing may jar in the best master's hand,
 And the most skilful archer mis his aim. Roscommon.

He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
 And every passion aptly harmoniz'd
 Amid' a jarring world. Thomson's Summer.

3. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.
 At last, though long, our jarring notes agree. Shakep.
 For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Venulus concluded his report:
 A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:
 As when a torrent rolls with rapid force,
 The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
 Roars horrible. Dryden's En.

4. To quarrel; to dispute.
 When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
 Through stubborn pride, among themselves did jar,
 Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
 Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar. Spenser.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

JAR. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.
 In r, the tongue is held stiffly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Clash; discord; debate.
 He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
 And yet his peace is but continual jar:
 O miserable men, that to him subject are! Fairy Queen.

Nathless, my brother, since we pass'd are Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Hubbard's Tale.
 Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,
 Between whose endless jar justice prelates,
 Would lose their names, and so would justice too. Shakep.

3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened.
 The chattering with dissenters, and dodging about this or other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. [Giarro, Italian.] An earthen vessel.
 About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.

He mead for cooling drink prepares,
 Of virgin honey in the jar. Dryden.
 Warriors welter on the ground,
 Whilst empty jars the dire defeat refund. Garth.

JARDES. n. f. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside. This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied. It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches. Farrier's Dict.

JARGON. n. f. [jargon, French; gerigonça, Spanish.] Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration, yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Bramhall.

From this last toil again what knowledge flows?
 Just as much, perhaps, as flows
 That all his predecessor's rules
 Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.

During the usurpation an infusion of enthusiastick jargon prevailed in every writing.

JARGONELLE. n. f. See PEAR, of which it is a species. Swift.
JASHAWK. n. f. A young hawk. Ainsworth.

JASMINE. n. f. [jasmín, French.] It is often pronounced jef-jasmine.
 It hath a funnel-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, which is cut into several segments at the brim, out of whose cup arises the pointal, which afterward becomes the fruit or pod, which, for the most part, grows double and open lengthwise, discovering the seeds, which are oblong, and have a border round them: these are ranged over each other like scales on a house, and are fastened to the placenta. Miller.

Thou, like the harmless bee, may'st freely range;
 From jasmine grove to grove may'st wander. Thomson.

JASMIN.

There majus is identical with magis. Hale's Origin of Man.

Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith. Tilston's Sermons.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some beings, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical above fixed continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley's Sermons.

IDENTIFY n. f. [from identité, Fr. identité, school Latin.] Sameness; not diversity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty. South's Sermon.

Considering any thing, as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thereon form the idea of identity and diversity. Locke.

It cuts off the sense at the end of every first line, which must always rhyme to the next following, and consequently produces too frequent an identity in sound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram. Prior.

IDES n. f. [from ides, Fr. ides, Lat. ides] A term anciently used among the

IDL

Romans, and still retained in the Romanish kalendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July and October, in which it is the 15th day, because in these four months it was six days before the nones, and in the others four days. Trevoux.

A footfayer bids you beware the ides of March. Shakespeare.

- He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our unfaining corn. Shakefp. King Lear.
6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.
This answer is both idle in regard of us, and also repugnant to themselves. Hooker.
They are not, in our estimation, idle reproofs, when the authors of needless innovations are oppos'd with such negatives, as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker, b. iii.
His friend smil'd scornful, and, with proud contempt,
Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.
An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.
How ill he wishes to recall the precious hours he has spent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diversions.
Rogers's Sermons.
TO IDLE. v. n. [from the adjective.] To lose time in laziness and inactivity.
Yet free from this poetick madness,
Next page he says, in sober sadness,
That the and all her fellow-gods
Sit idling in their high abodes. Prior.
IDLEHEADED. adj. [idile and head.] Foolish; unreasonable.

near the place still. LeStrange.
IDLENESS. n. f. [from idle.]
1. Laziness; sloth; sluggishness; aversion from labour.
Nor is excess the only thing by which sin mauls and breaks men in their health, and the comfortable enjoyment of themselves thereby; but many are also brought to a very ill and languishing habit of body by mere idleness, and idleness is both itself a great sin, and the cause of many more. South's Sermon.
2. Absence of employment.
All which yet could not make us accuse her, though it made us pine away for spight, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney, b. ii.
To the English court assemblé now,
From every region, apes of idleness. Shakefp. Henry IV.
He fearing idleness, the nurse of ill,
In sculpture exercis'd his happy skill. Dryden's Ovid.
Nature being liberal to all without labour, necessity imposing no industry or travel, idleness bringeth forth no other fruits than vain thoughts and licentious pleasures. Raleigh.
3. Omision of business.
Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
4. Unimportance; trivialness.
5. Inefficacy; uselessness.

I will flay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease. Shakefp. Henry VI.
2. Foolishly; in a trifling manner.
And modern A'gill, whose capricious thought
Is yet with stores of wilder notions fraught,
Too soon convinc'd, shall yield that fleeting breath,
Which play'd so idly with the darts of death. Prior.
3. Carelessly; without attention.
This from rumour's tongue
I idly heard; if true or false, I know not. Shakefp. K. John.
But shall we take the muse abroad,
To drop her idly on the road?
And leave our subject in the middle,
As Butler did his bear and fiddle? Prior.
4. Ineffectually; vainly.
Let this and other allegations, suitable unto it, cease to bark any longer idly against the truth, the course and passage whereof it is not in them to hinder. Hooker.

He's honoured and lov'd by all;
The soldiers' god, and people's idol. Denham's Sophy.
IDOLATER. n. f. [idolatre, French; idolatra, Latin.] One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships for God that which is not God.
The state of idolaters is two ways miserable: first, in that which they worship they find no success; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of graces, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion. Hooker.
An astrologer may be no Christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism. Bentley's Sermons.
TO IDOLATRIZE. v. a. [from idolater.] To worship idols. Ans.
IDOLATROUS. adj. [from idolater.] Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry, or the worship of false gods.
Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatrous use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped. Eacham on Drawing.
IDOLATROUSLY. adv. [from idolatrous.] In an idolatrous manner.
Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done; but let whatsoever they have either thought or done idolatrously, be so far forth abhorred. Hooker.
IDOLATRY. n. f. [idolatrie, Fr. idolatria, Lat.] The worship of images; the worship of any thing as God which is not God.
Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd and ador'd;
And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statued in thy stead. Shakefp. Lear.
Idolatry is not only an accounting or worshipping that for God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way wholly unfit to his nature; and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal resemblances.
South's Sermons.
The kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Addison's Spectator.
IDOLIST. n. f. [from idol.] A worshipper of images. A poetical word.
I to God have brought
Dis honour, obloquy, and op'd the mouths
Of idolists and atheists. Milton's Aconit.

I. E. for idyl, or that is.
That which raises the natural interest of money, is the same that raises the rent of land, i. e. its aptness to bring in yearly, to him that manages it, a greater overplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour. Lake.
JEALOUS. adj. [jaloux, French.]
1. Suspicious in love.
To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the sting
Are of the adder. Shakefp. King Lear.
Wear your eye thus; not jealous, nor secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abus'd: look to't. Shak. Othello.
Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband.
Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
A jealous empress lies within your arms,
Too haughty to endure neglected charms. Dryd. Aureng.

city in it, or his restless and mutinous humour, transported him. Clarendon, b. viii.
5. Suspiciously careful.
Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the English nation; yet his cruelties and parricides weigh'd down his virtues. Bacon's Henry VII.
They jealous of their secrets, fiercely oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar
Protecting fate supreme. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
How nicely jealous is every one of his own reputé, and yet how maliciously prodigal of other mens. Dec. of Piety.
6. Suspiciously fearful.
'Tis doing wrong creates such doubts as these;
Renders us jealous, and destroys our peace. Waller.
While the people are so jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not see any other method left for them to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift.
JEALOUSLY. adv. [from jealous.] Suspiciously; emulously;
with suspicious fear, vigilance, or caution.
JEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from jealous.] The state of being jealous;
rivalry; suspicion; suspicious vigilance.

Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite. Fairy Queen.
The sweet woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealousy man. Shakefp. Lear.
How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair;
And thud ring fears, and green-ey'd jealousy!
O love, be moderate; ally thy extasy. Shakefp. Lear.
Why did you suffer Jachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his noble heart and brain
With needless jealousy? Shakefp. Cymbeline.
Small jealousies, 'tis true, inflame desire;
Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire. Dryden.
2. Suspicious fear.
The obtinacy in Essex, in refusing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealousy, that when the king had got him into his hands, he would take revenge upon him. Clarend.
3. Suspicious caution, vigilance, or rivalry.
TO JEER. v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To scoff; to flout; to make mock.
The merry world did on a day,
With his trainbands and mates, agree
To meet together where I lay,
And all in sport to jeer at me. Herbert.
Abstain from dissolute laughter, petulant uncomely jests, loud talking, and jeering, which are called indecencies and incivilities. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

In this adventure's chanceful jeopardy.
Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn
To ashes ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy. Shakefp. K. John.
This colour will be reprehended or encountered, by im-puting to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or at least a casualty or jeopardy. Bacon.
TO JERK. v. a. [genecan, Saxon.] To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written jerk.
I lack inquiry
Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times
I thought to've jerk'd him here under the ribs. Shakefp. Othello.
Battings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a working. Swift.
TO JERK. v. n. To strike up; to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.
Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet;
But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.
JERK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A smart quick lash.
Contemn the silly taunts of fleeting buffoonry; and the *jerk*s of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly. Glanv.
Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis; neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden.
2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.
Well run Tawney, the abbot's churl;
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl!
His hood after the kick. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.
Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by *jerk*s or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.
JERKEN. n. f. [cjprelkin, Saxon.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat.
A man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin. Shak.
Mistress Line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line: now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin. Shakefp. Tempest.
Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us to fit materials for clothing as the wool of the sheep? Moré's Antidote against Atheism.
Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor frieze jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but small audience. South's Sermons.
Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a ferkin. Hudibras, p. ii.
I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Gulliver's Travels.
JERKIN. n. f. A kind of hawk. Answorth. This should be written gyrkin.
JERSEY. n. f. [from the island of Jersey, where much yarn is spun.] Fine yarn of wool.
JESS. n. f. [gesso, French; getta, Italian.] Short straps of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which this is held on the fist. Hammer.

JET

If I prove her haggard,
Though that my jesses were her dear heartstrings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Shakespeare's Othello.
JESSAMINE. n. f. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.
Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullambines;
Her breast like lillies, ere their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossom'd jessamines. Spenser.
JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE. n. f. Sunflower, of which they are a species.
Jerusalem artichokes are increased by small off-sets, and by quartering the roots. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To JEST. v. n. [cf. gesticular, Latin.] To divert or make merry by words or actions.
Jest not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced.
Ecclij. viii. 4.

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?
—You may jest on; but I do not like these feveral councils. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
JEST. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.
But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake?
As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon's Essays.

No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy Scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break jests upon them. Tillotson's Sermons.

He had turn'd all tragedy to jest. Prior.

2. The object of jests; laughing-stock.
If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me;
then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shak. Mer. W. of Windsor.
3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real; ludicrous, not serious; game, not earnest.

That high All-fee, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shakespeare's R. III.
When his play-fellows chose him their king, he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have become a king in earnest. Grew's Cosmol.

JESTER. n. f. [from jest.]
1. One given to merriment and pranks:
The skipping king, he rambl'd up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits;
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

2. One given to farcical.

Now, as a jestler, I accost you,
Which never yet one friend has lost you. Swift.

3. Buffoon; jackpudding.

Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser on Ireland.

JET. n. f. [gagat, Saxon; get, Dutch; gagatis, Latin.]

1. Jet is a very beautiful fossil, of a firm and very even structure, and of a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay. It is of a fine deep black colour, having a grain resembling that of wood. The ancients recommended jet in medicine; but it is now used only in toys. It is confound with cannal-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.

Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

There is more difference between this flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

The bottom clear,
Now laid with many a jet
Of feed-pearl, ere the bath'd her there;
Was known as black as jet. Dryden.

One of us in glass is jet,
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.

Under flowing jet,
Of funny ringlets, or of circling brown,
The neck slight shaded. Thomson's Summer.

2. [Jet, French.] A spout or shoot of water.

Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should thus way bend, the next an adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end. Blackmore's Creation.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pepe.

3. A yard. Obsolete.

What orchard unrobbed escapes?
Or pullet dare walk in their jet. Tusser's Husbandry.

To JET. v. n. [jetter, French.]

1. To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude; to jut out.

Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Shakespeare's Tit. And.

JEW

2. To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait.
Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

3. To jolt; to be shaken. [Jetter, French.]

Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach the was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. Wifem.

JETSAM. n. f. [jetter, French.] Goods or other things

JETSON. s. which, having been cast over board in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral. Bailey.

JETTY. adj. [from jet.]

1. Made of jet.

2. Black as jet.

The people about Capo Negro, Cefala, and Madagafcar, are of a jetty black. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Her hair
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd. Prior.

Nigriana black, and Merdamente brown,
Vied for his love in jetty bow'r's below. Pepe's Dunciad.

JEWEL. n. f. [jgaw, French; jewelen, Dutch.]

1. Any ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.

Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture. Shak.

They found him dead, and call into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. Shak.

The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and a portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world: a man putting all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel. South.

2. A precious stone; a gem.

Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stones,
Stol'n by my daughter! Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Proud fame's imperial feat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great. Pepe.

3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.

Bid farewell to your sisters.
—Ye jewels of our father, with waf'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you. Shakespeare's King Lear.

JEWEL-HOUSE, or Office. n. f. The place where the regal ornaments are deposited.

The king has made him
Master of the jewel-house. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

JEWELLER. n. f. [from jewel.] One who trafficks in precious stones.

These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller. Boyle.

The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsic worth of a thing to a man of sense is another. L'Estrange.

I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Adams.

JEWS-EARS. n. f. [from its resemblance of the human ear.
Skinner.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, while growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and variously hollowed cup; from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides are undulated, and in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in it ridges like those of the human ear. Its substance is tough like leather, and its colour very dark. It is light when dry, of a disagreeable smell and nauseous taste. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder-trees, especially where they are decaying. It is not much used by physicians; but the common people cure themselves of sore throats with a de-coction of it in milk. Hill's Mat. Med.

An herb called jew's-ear groweth upon the lower parts of elder, and sometimes aches: in warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely. Bacon's Natural History.

JEWS-MALLOW. n. f. [corchorus, Latin.]

The leaves are produced alternately at the joints of the stalks: the flower has five leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the point of the flower becomes a cylindrical fruit, divided into five cells, filled with angular seeds. Romelf says it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Müller.

JEW-STONE. n. f. An extraneous fossil, being the cla-vated spine of a very large egg-shaped sea-urchin, petrified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering to each end; generally about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter. It is ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky redness.
It is found in Syria, lodged in a loose sandy stone, or a marly very hard earth. It is diuretick; but has been falsely recommended as a lithontriptick. Hill's Mat. Med.

JEW-HARP. n. f. A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of spring

IGN

spring of iron, which, being struck by the hand, plays against the breath.

Ign. conjunction. [Sax. Saxon.]

1. Suppose that; allowing that. A hypothetical particle.

Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, ifs or ands. Hobbes's Preface.

If that rebellion
Came like itself, in base and abject routs;
I say, if damn'd commotion to appear'd;
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

If they have done this deed, my noble lord.

—If talk't thou to me of ifs? Thou art a traitor. Shak.

This seeing of all things, because we can desire to see all things, he makes a proof that they are present to our minds; and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, which amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false.

All of them suppose the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maxim to be good; if to be there were no refurrection. Tillotson's Sermons, Preface.

Tisiphone, that oft hath heard my pray'r,
Assist, if Oedipus deserve thy care. Pepe's Statius.

2. Whether or no.

Uncertain if by augury, or chance;
But by this easy rite they all advance.

She doubts if two and two make four:
It can't—it may be—and it must;
To which of these must Alma trust?
Nay, further yet they make her go,
In doubting if she doubts or no. Prior.

3. Though I doubt whether; suppose it be granted that.

Such mechanical circumstances, if I may so call them, were not necessary to the experiments. Boyle.

IGNEOUS. adj. [ignis, Latin.] Fire; containing fire; emitting fire; having the nature of fire.

That the fire burns by heat, leaves us still ignorant of the immediate way of igneous solutions. Glauc. Sisyph. c. 20.

IGNIPOTENT. adj. [ignis and potens, Latin.] Prefiding over fire.

IGNIS FATUUS. n. f. [Latin.] Will with the wisp; Jack with the lantern.

Vapours arising from putrified waters are usually called ignis fatui. Newton's Opt.

To IGNITE. v. a. [from ignis, fire, Latin.] To kindle; to set on fire.

Take good firm chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it. Grew's Myseum.

IGNITION. n. f. [ignition, French, from ignite.] The act of kindling, or of setting on fire.

The laborer stirred the kindled nitre, that the ignition might be presently communicated. Boyle.

Those black circular lines we see on dishes, and other turned vessels of wood, are the effects of ignition, by the pressure of an edged stick upon the vessel turned nimbly in the lathe. Ray.

IGNITIBLE. adj. [from ignite.] Inflammable; capable of being set on fire.

Such bodies only strike fire which have sulphur or ignitable parts. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

IGNIVOMOUS. adj. [ignivomus, Latin.] Vomiting fire.

Vulcanus and ignivomus mountains are some of the most terrible flocks of the globe. Darham's Physico-Theology.

IGNOBLE. adj. [ignobis, ignobilis, Latin.]

1. Mean of birth; not noble; not of illustrious race.

As when in tumults rise th' ignoble crowd,
Mad are their motions, and their tongues are loud. Dryden.

2. Worthless; not deserving honour. Used of things or persons.

The noble life doth want her proper limbs;
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants. Shak. Rich. III.

IGNOMINIOUS. adj. [from ignoble.] Ignominiously; meanly; dishonourably; reproachfully; disgracefully.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious, titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtues, all their fame
Ignobly! Milton's Paradise Lost, l. xi.

Here, over-match'd in fight, in heaps they lie;
There scatter'd o'er the fields ignobly fly. Dryden's Æn.

IGNOMINIOUSLY. adv. [ignominieus, French; ignominiosus, Lat.
from ignominia.] Mean; shameful; reproachful; dishonour-able. Used both of persons and things.

They with pale fear surpriz'd,
Fled ignominiously. Milton.

Cethegus, though a traitor to the state,
And tortur'd, 'scap'd this ignominious fate. Dryden's Jucen.

They gave, and the transfer'd the curs'd advice,
That monarchs should their inward foul disguise;
By ignominious arts, for servile ends,
Should compliment their foes, and then their friends. Prior.

IGN

Nor has this kingdom deferred to be sacrificed to one single, rapacious, obscure, ignominious projector. Swift.

IGNOMINIOUSLY. adv. [from ignominieus.] Meanly; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully; reproachfully.

It is some allay to the infamy of him who died ignominiously to be buried privately. South's Sermons.

IGNOMINY. n. f. [ignominie, Fr. ignominia, Latin.] Disgrace; reproach; shame; infamy; meanness; dishonour.

Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heav'n;
Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave. Shakespeare's H. IV.

Strength from truth divided, and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise
And ignominy; yet to glory aspires,
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

Their generals have been received with honour after their defeat, yours with ignominy after conquest. Addison.

IGNORAMUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Ignoramus is a word properly used by the grand inquest im-pannelled in the inquisition of causes criminal and publick; and written upon the bill, whereby any crime is offered to their consideration, when they mislike their evidence as defective, or too weak to make good the presentment; the effect of which word is written is, that all farther inquiry upon that party, for that fault, is thereby stopped, and he delivered without farther answer. Cowel.

2. A foolish fellow; a vain unfrustrated pretender. A low word.

Tell an ignoramus, in place and power, that he has a wit and an understanding above all the world, and he shall readily admit the commendation. South's Sermons.

IGNORANCE. n. f. [ignorance, French; ignoratio, Latin.]

1. Want of knowledge; unskilfulness.

If all the clergy were as learned as themselves are that most complain of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same. Hobbes, b. v.

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakespeare.

Still banish your defenders, 'till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If he have power,
Then veil your ignorance; if none, awake
Your dangerous lenity. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If we see right, we see our woes;
From what avails it to have eyes?
From ignorance our comfort flows,
The only wretched are the wise!

2. Want of knowledge discovered by external effect. In this sense it has a plural.

Forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignorances. C. Pray.

Punish me not for my sins and ignorances. Tob. iii. 2.

IGNORANT. adj. [ignorant, French; ignorans, Latin.]

1. Wanting knowledge; unlearned; unfrustrated; unenlightened.

So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast. Pf. lxxiii. 22.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time, and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

In such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He that doth not know those things which are of use for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson's Sermons.

Fools grant what'er ambition craves,
And men, once ignorant, are slaves. Pepe.

2. Unknown; undiscovers.

If you know aught, which does behave my knowledge Thereof to be inform'd, imprison not In ignorant concealment. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

3. Without knowledge of some particular.

Let not judges be to ignorant of their own right, as to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wise application of laws. Bacon's Essays.

O visions ill foreseen! Better had I
Liv'd ignorant of future! so had borne
My part of evil only. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. xi.

4. Unacquainted with. In a good sense.

Ignorant of guilt, I fear not shame. Dryden.

5. Ignorantly made or done.

His shipping,
Poor ignorant baubles, on our terrible seas
Like egg-shells mov'd. Shakespeare.

IGNORANTLY. n. f. One untaught, unlettered, unfrustrated.

Did I for this take pains to teach
Our zealous ignorants to preach! Denham.

IGNORANTLY. adv. [from ignorant.] Without knowledge;
unskilfully; without information.

The greatest and most cruel foes we have,
Are those whom you would ignorantly save. Dryden.

When a poet, an orator, or a painter has performed admirably,

ILE

mirably, we sometimes mistake his blunders for beauties, and are to ignorantly fond as to copy after them. Watts.
To IGNORANT. v. a. [ignorant, French; ignarus, Latin.] Not to know; to be ignorant of. This word Boyle endeavoured to introduce; but it has not been received.

I ignored not the stricter interpretation, given by modern critics to divers texts, by me alleged. Boyle.
Philosophy would solidly be established, if men would more carefully distinguish those things that they know from those that they ignore. Boyle.
IGNOSCIBLE. adj. [ignoscibilis, Latin.] Capable of pardon. Dist.

JIG. n. f. [giga, Italian; geige, Teutonic; a fiddle.] A light careless dance, or tune.
When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike music, he appointed to them certain lascivious lays and loose jigs; by which he so mollified and abated their courage, that they forgot their former fierceness. Spenser on Ireland.

As fiddlers still,
Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jig upon you. Dome.
Posterity shall know that you dare, in these jig given times, to countenance a legitimate poem. Ben. Johnson.
All the swains that there abide,
With jigs and rural dance resort. Milton.
The mutes blushed to see their friends exalting
Those elegant delights of jig and vaulting. Fenton.
They wrote to her friends in the country, that the should dance a jig next October in Westminsterhall. Arbuthnot.
Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus reigns,
Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains. Pope.
To JIG. v. n. [from the noun.] To dance carelessly; to dance.
Expressed in contempt.

As for the jigging part and figures of dances, I count that little. Locke.
JIG-MAKER. n. f. [jig and make.] One who dances or plays merrily.

Your only jig-maker! what should a man do but be merry?
Shakespeare's Hamlet.
JIGGUMBOO. n. f. [A cant word.] A trinket; a knick-knack; a slight contrivance in machinery.

He rifled all his pokes and fobs
Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs. Hudibras, p. iii.
JILT. n. f. [gilt, Icelandic, to intrap in an amour. Mr. Lye.
Perhaps from gylot, by contraction; or gillet, or gillet, the diminutive of gill, the ludicrous name for a woman. 'Tis also called jillet in Scotland.]

1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him.
Avoid both courts and camps,
Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools. Oruay's Orphan.
2. A name of contempt for a woman.
When love was all an easy monarch's care,
Jilt rul'd the state, and flatterers farces writ. Pope.
To JILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.
Tell who loves who;
And who is jilted for another's sake. Dryden's Juvenal.
Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted; bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.
She might have learn'd to cuckold, jilt, and sham,
Had Covent-garden been at Surinam. Congreve.
To JINGLE. v. n. [A word made from jangle, or copied from the found intended to be expressed.] To clink; to sound correspondently.

What should the wars do with these jingling fools? Shak.
With noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
We were awak'd. Shakespeare's Tempest.
You ne'er with jingling words deceive the ear;
And yet, on humble subjects, great appear. Smith.
What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old! Pope.

JINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Correspondent sounds.
Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
2. If you plant where favages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon's Essays.
JLE. n. f. [corrupted from aile, French.] A walk or alley in a church or public building. Properly aile.
Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
And arches widen, and long ies extend. Pope.
JLE. n. f. [aile, French.] An ear of corn. Answorth.
JLEUS. n. f. [Latin.]
The consequences of inflammation is an ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts; but is really either a circumsolution, or infection of one part of the gut within the other. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ILL

PLEX. n. f. [Latin.]
The plex, or great scarlet oak, thrives well in England, is a hardy sort of tree, and easily raised of acorns. The Spaniards have a sort they call enzina; the wood of which, when old, is finely chambeletted, as if it were painted, and is useful for flocks of tools, mallet-heads, chairs, axle-trees, wedges, beetles, pins, and palliades for fortifications, being very hard and durable. Mortimer.

LIAC. adj. [iliacus, Latin.] Relating to the lower bowels.
The iliac passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly.
Those who die of the iliac passion have their bellies much swelled. Floyer on the Humours.
LIAC. Passion. n. f. A kind of nervous cholick, whole seat is the ilium, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above; whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvo, to roll.

ILX. adu. [Coke, Saxon.] Eke; also. It is still retained in Scotland, and denotes each: as, ilk one of you, every one of you. It also signifies the same; as, Maintain of that ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his estate are the same.

Shepherds, should it not offend
Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse
Of Rosalind, who knows not Rosalind,
That Colin made? ilk can I you rehearse. Spenser.

ILL. adj. [contracted from EVIL, and retaining all its senses.]
1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See EVIL.

2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that evil is ever used in this sense.
You wish me health in very happy season;
For I am on the fudden something ill. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
I have known two towns of the greatest consequence lost, by the governours falling ill in the time of the sieges. Temple.

ILL. n. f.
1. Wickedness.
Ill, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance. Bacon.
Young men to imitate all ills are prone;
But are compell'd to avarice alone:
For then in virtue's shape they follow vice. Dryden's Juvenal.
Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles ill,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden's Aeneid.

2. Misfortune; misery.
Who can all sense of others ills escape,
Is but a brute at best in human shape. Tate's Juvenal.
Though plung'd in ills and exercise in care,
Yet never let the noble mind despair;
When press'd by dangers, and beset with foes,
The gods their timely succour interpose;
And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief,
By unforeseen expedients bring relief. A. Phillips.

ILL. adv.
1. Not well; not rightly in any respect.
Ill at ease, both he and all her train
The scorching sun had borne, and beating rain. Dryden.

2. Not easily.

When you expose the scene,
Down the ill organ'd engines fall,
Off fly the vizards. Swift.

For Phthia fix'd is my return;
Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn,
Than from an equal here sustain the publick scorn. Dryden.

There motly images her fancy strike,
Figures ill paid, and similes unlike. Pope's Dunciad.
Sparta has not to boast of such a woman;
Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love. Dryden.

I shall direct you better, a talk for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had more opportunities than many others to observe what sources the follies of women are derived from. Swift.

Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relished portion. Locke.

Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
Her thoughts inventive on the bridal day;
The conscious fire the dawning blush survey'd,
And smiling thus bespoke the blooming maid. Pope's Odyssey.

Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain:
As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is the condemn'd by fate. Dryden.

The god inform'd
This ill shap'd body with a daring soul. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

ILLUSTION. n. f. [illustio, Latin; illustio, Fr.] Mockery; false show; counterfeit appearance; error.
That, distill'd by magic lights,
Shall raise such artificial spirits,
As, by the strength of their illustion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion.

ILL

IMA

There wanted not some about him that would have persuaded him that all was but an illustion. Bacon's Henry VII.
So oft they fell
Into the same illustion; not as many,
Whom they triumph'd, once laps'd. Milton's Parad. Legt.
An excuse for uncharitableness, drawn from pretended inability, is of all others the most general and prevailing illustion.
Many are the illustions by which the enemy endeavours to cheat men into security, and defeat their title to salvation.
To dream once more I close my willing eyes;
Ye soft illustions, dear deceits, arise!
We must use some illustion to render a pastoral delightful; and this consists in exposing the best side only of a shepherd's life, and in concealing its miseries.
ILLUSIVE. adj. [illusivus, Latin.] Deceiving by false show.
The heathen bards, who idle fables dress,
Illusive dreams in mystick forms express.
While the fond soul,
Wrapt in gay visions of unreal bliss,
Still paints th' illusive form.
ILLUSORY. adj. [in in luforius, Latin; illuforie, Fr.] Deceiving; fraudulent.
Subtlety, in those who make profession to teach or defend truth, hath passed for a virtue: a virtue indeed, which, confiding for the most part in nothing but the fallacious and illufory use of obscure or deceitful terms, is only fit to make men more conceited in their ignorance.
To ILLUSTRATE. v. n. [illustro, Latin; illustres, Fr.]
1. To brighten with light.
2. To brighten with honour.
Matter to me of glory! whom their hate
Illustrates, when they see all regal pow'r
Giv'n me to quell their pride.
Thee the enroll'd her garter'd knights among,
Illustrating the noble list.
3. To explain; to clear; to elucidate.
They take up popular conceits, and from tradition unjustifiable, or really false, illustrate matters of undeniable truth.
ILLUSTRATION. n. f. [illustration, Fr. from illustrare.] Explanation; elucidation; expolition.
Whoever looks about him will find many living illustrations of this emblem.

1. Any corporeal representation, generally used of statues; a statue; a picture.
Whole is this image and superscription?
The one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's oldest son, ever more talking.
Even like a stony image, cold and numb.
The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion.
Still must I be upbraided with your line;
But your late brother did not prize me less,
Because I could not boast of image.
2. An idol; a false god.
3. A copy; representation; likeness.
To bear his image and renew his glories!

I M A

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his images:
But now two mirrors of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death. Shaksp. R. III.

The image of the jett
I'll shew you here at large. Shaksp. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
He made us to his image all agree;
That image is the foul, and that must be,
Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden.

4. Semblance; show; appearance.
Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all night! Mere fetches,
The images of revolt. Shaksp. King Lear.
This is the man should do the bloody deed!
The image of a wicked heinous fault Lives in his eye. Shaksp. King John.
The face of things a frightful image bears,
And present death in various forms appears. Dryden's Æn.

5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.
Outcalls of mortal race! can we conceive
Image of aught delightful, soft, or great? Prior.
When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles, we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles; but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles. Watts.
To IMAGINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy;
to imagine.
How are immaterial substances to be imag'd, which are such things whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.
Image to thy mind.
How our forefathers to the Stygian shades Went quick. Phillips.
His ear oft frighted with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd. Prior.
If fate some future bard shall join
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

IMAGERY. n. f. [from image.]
1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.
Of marble stone was cut
An altar, carv'd with cunning imagery. Fairy Queen.
When in those oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraits, and imagery;
Where every figure to the life express'd
The godhead's power. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Your gift shall two large goblets be
Of silver, wrought with curious imagery,
And high emboss'd. Dryden's Æn.

2. Show; appearance.
What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Secluded from the world, and all its care,
Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear? Prior.
All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the paint and imagery that attracted our senses, fade and disappear. Rogers.
Things of the world fill the imaginative part with beauties and fantastick imagery. Taylor.

3. Copies of the fancy; false ideas; imaginary phantasms.
It might be a mere dream which he saw; the imagery of a melancholick fancy, such as musing men mistake for a reality. Atterbury's Sermons.

4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.
I wish there may be in this poem any instance of good imagery. Dryden.

IMAGINABLE. adj. [imaginable, Fr. from imaginer.] Possible to be conceived.
It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot esteem. South's Sermons.
Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity. Tillotson's Sermons.

IMAGINANT. adj. [imaginant, French.] Imagining; forming ideas.
We will enquire what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon.

IMAGINARY. adj. [imaginaire, French, from imaginer.]
1. Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.
False sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shaksp.
Expectation whirls me round:
Th' imaginary relief is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raleigh's History of the World.
Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer, Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison's Cato.

IMAGINATION. n. f. [imaginatio, Latin; imagination, French, from imaginer.]
1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

I M B

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds; joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.
Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Glarus. Scelf.
O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The flight of this horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton's Agonistes.
His imaginings were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.
2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.
Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginings; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sid.
Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginings,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shaksp. R. III.

Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be lever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginings, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shaksp. King Lear.
We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself leads us. Locke.

3. Contrivance; scheme.
Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imagin- ations against me. Leam. iii. 60.

IMAGINATIVE. adj. [imaginativus, Fr. from imaginer.] Fantastick;
full of imagination.
Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon's Natural History.
Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastical part, because our fancy is usually pleas'd with the entertainment of shadows and gauds. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To IMAGINE. v. a. [imaginer, French; imaginor, Latin.]
1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.
Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed. Shaksp.
Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings. Shaksp. Macbeth.
What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition? Locke.

2. To scheme; to contrive.
They intended evil against thee, they imagined a mischievous device. Pf. xxi. 11.

IMAGINER. n. f. [from imaginer.] One who forms ideas.
The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a garter that was held up; and still he did it, by first telling the imaginer, and after bidding the actor think. Bacon's Natural History.

IMBECILE. adj. [imbecilis, Latin; imbecille, French.] Weak; feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.
To IMBECILE. v. a. [from the adjective.] This word is corruptly written imbecile. To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations.
Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbeciled. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

IMBECILITY. n. f. [imbecillitas, French.] Weakness; feebleness of mind or body.
A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imperfection. Hooker, b. iv.
No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Hooker.
We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves.
The way we are contented to prove, which, being the worst in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brook'd. Hooker.
Strength would be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son would strike his father dead. Shaksp.
Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them. King Charles.
When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBIBE. v. a. [imbibe, Latin; imbibere, French.]
1. To drink in; to draw in.
A pot of ashes will receive more hot water than cold, for-asmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt. Brewer.
The torrent mercies imbibe
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes. Swift.
Illumin'd

I M B

Illumin'd wide,
The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the sun. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To admit into the mind.
Those that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises. Hammond.
It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom. Locke.
Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. To drench; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampl'd, is necessary in the English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.
Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissoluble in water; and this earth, imbued with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newton.

IMBUE. n. f. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.
Sals are strong imbibers of sulphureous fumes. Arbutnot.

IMBUEMENT. n. f. [imbibition, French, from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.
Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.
Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all made-faction there is required an imbibition. Bacon's Natural History.
A drop of oil, fell fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To IMBUE. v. a. [from imbibe.]
1. To make bitter.
2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.
Let them extinguish their passions which imbitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Addison's Freeholder.
Is there any thing that more imbitters the enjoyments of this life than shame? South's Sermons.

To IMBUE. v. a. [from body.]
1. To condense to a body.
2. To invest with matter.
An opening cloud reveals
An heav'nly form imbued, and array'd
With robes of light. Dryden.
Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterial spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glarus. Scelf.

3. To bring together into one mass or company.
I by vow am so embodied yours,
That the which marries you must marry me. Shaksp.
Never since created, man
Met such imbodied force, as nam'd with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry
Warr'd on by cranes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
Under their head embodied all in one. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
Then Clausus came, who led a num'rous band
Of troops embodied, from the Sabine land. Dryden's Æn.

4. To include. Improper.
In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral imbued in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marble. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBUE. v. n. To unite into one mass; to coalesce.
The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, 'till the quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.
The idea of white, which now yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow to-day, put together in your mind, imbodies and run into one. Locke.

To IMBUE. v. n. [from boil.] To exultate; to effervesce;
to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron.
With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imbuing in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Fairy Queen.

To IMBOLDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence; to encourage.
'Tis necessary he should die:
Nothing imboldens sin so much as mercy. Shak. Timon.
I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something imboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
I was the more imboldened, because I found I had a foul congenial to his. Dryden.
Not flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay. Dryden's Æn.
Their virtues and superior genius imboldened them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms. Swift.

To IMBO'SOM. v. a. [from befom.]
1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.
The Father infinite,
By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the son. Milton's Par. Lost.
Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,
And sp'ry towns by furling columns mark'd. Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.
But glad desire, his late imbosom'd guest,
Yet but a babe, with milk of fight he nurs'd. Sidney.
Who glad t' imbosom his affection vile,
Did all the might, more plainly to appear. Fairy Queen.

To IMBO'UND. v. a. [from boud.] To inclose; to shut in.
That sweet breath,
Which was embosom'd in this beauteous clay. Shak. K. John.

To IMBO'W. v. a. [from bou.] To arch; to vault.
Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond sure,
Imbosom'd with gold and gorgeous ornament. Fairy Queen.
Imbosom'd windows be pretty retiring places for conference:
they keep both the wind and sun off. Bacon.
Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister's pale,
And love the high embosom'd roof,
With antick pillar mazy proof. Milton.

IMBO'WMENT. n. f. [from imbou.] Arch; vault.
The roof all open, not so much as any embowment near any of the walls left. Bacon's Natural History.

To IMBO'WER. v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower;
to shelter with trees.
And flooping thence to Ham's embowering walks,
In spotless peace retir'd. Thomson.

To IMBRANGLED. v. a. To intangle. A low word.
With subtle cobweb cheats
They're catch'd in knotted law, like nets;
In which, when once they are imbangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled. Hudibras.

IMBRICATED. adj. [from imbrix, Latin.] Indented with concavities; bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMBRICATION. n. f. [imbrix, Latin.] Concave indenture.
All is guarded with a well made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries. Derham.

To IMBRO'WN. v. a. [from brown.] To make brown; to darken;
to obscure; to cloud.
Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unpiere'd shade
Imbrown'd the noontide bow's. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The walking crew,
At thy request, support the miry thoe;
The foot grows black that was with dirt imbrown'd,
And in thy pocket ginging half-pence found. Goy.
Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre. Pope.
Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands. Pope.

To IMBRU'E. v. a. [from in and brue.]
1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long.
Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed
Of mighty victors, with wide wounds imbrou'd,
And by thy cruel darts to thee subdu'd. Spenser.
There streams a spring of blood so fast
From those deep wounds, as all imbrou'd the face
Of that accursed catiff. Daniel's Civil War.
The merciless Turks, imbrou'd with the Christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Kneller's History of the Turks.
At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,
Whole arrows in my blood their wings imbroue. Sandys.
Lucius pities the offenders,
That would embroue their hands in Cato's blood. Addison.
Lo! these hands in murder are imbrou'd,
Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.
These, where two ways in equal parts divide,
Two bleeding lakes from afar descry'd,
Whose panting vapours, warm with life, the draws,
And in their hearts embroue her cruel claws. Pope.
His virgin sword Ægeyphus' veins imbrou'd;
The murder fell, and blood atton'd for blood. Pope.
A good man chafes rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbroue his hands in blood. Clarissa.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.
Some bathed kisses, and did oft embroue
The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips. Fairy Queen.

To IMBRUTE. v. a. [from brute.] To degrade to brutality.
I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast; and mix with bestial slime,
This essence to incarnate and imbroue. Milton's Par. Lost.

To IMBRUTE. v. n. To sink down to brutality.
The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbroue, 'till the quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.

IMPAIRMENT. n. f. [from impair.] Diminution; injury.
His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
IMPALEABLE. adj. [from impalpable, Fr. in and palpable.] Not to be perceived by touch.
If beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out, it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the fineness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion. Boyle.
TO IMPARADISE. v. a. [from imparadisare, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.
This imparadis'd neighbourhood made Zelmane's soul cleave unto her, both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did over-cloud it. Sidney, b. ii.
All my souls be
Imparadis'd in you, in whom alone
I understand, and grow, and see. Denne.
Thus these two,
Imparadis'd in one another's arms,
The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill
Of bliss on bliss. Milton's Paradise Lost.
IMPARITY. n. f. [from imparitas, impar, Latin.]
1. Inequality; disproportion.
Some bodies are hard, some soft: the hardness is caused chiefly by the jeuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts. Bacon.
2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.
What verity is there in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man, by even and odd; and so by parity or imparity of letters in mens names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies? Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name; Dryden's En.
Love is impartial, and to both the same. Dryden's En.
IMPARTIALITY. n. f. [from impartialitas, French; from impartialis.]
Equitableness; justice.
A pious and well disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success unto our inquiries into truth; it being scarce possible for that man to hit the mark, whose eye is still glancing upon something beside
it. Saunders's Sermons.
IMPARTIALLY. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiased judgment; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.
Since the Scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition. Saunders's Sermons.
IMPARTIBLE. adj. [from impartibilis, Fr. from impartire.] Communicable; to be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant,

The dew of the morning impeach every thorn, and scatter diamonds on the verdant mantle of the earth. Digby to Pope.

IMPECCABILITY, n. f. [impeccabilis, Fr. from impeccare.] Exemption from failure.

Infallibility and impeccability are two of his attributes. Pope.

IMPECCABLE, adj. [impeccable, French; in and pecco, Latin.] Exempt from possibility of sin.

That man pretends he never commits any act prohibited by the word of God, and then that was a rare charm to render him impeccable, or that is the means of confecting every sin of his. Hammond on Fundamentals.

To IMPEDE, v. a. [impedio, Latin.] To hinder; to let; to obstruct.

All the forces are mustered to impede its passage. Decay of Piety.

The way is open, and no stop to force
The stars return, or to impede their course. Creech.

IMPEDEMENT, n. f. [impedimentum, Latin.] Hindrance; let; impediment; obstruction; opposition.

The minds of beasts grudge not at their bodies comfort, nor are their senses letted from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience. Sidney.

What impediments there are to hinder it, and which were the speediest way to remove them. Hobbs.

The life is led most happily wherein all virtue is exercised without impediment or let. Hobbs.

They bring one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech. Mar. vii. 32.

But for my tears,
The most impediments unto my speech,
I had forefall'd this dear and deep rebuke. Shaksp. H. IV.

May I never
To this good purpose, that so fairly shews, Dream of impediment. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Free from th' impediments of light and noise,
Man, thus retir'd, his nobler thoughts employs. Waller.

Fear is the greatest impediment to martyrdom; and he that is overcome by little arguments of pain, will hardly consent to lose his life with torments. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To IMPEL, v. a. [impello, Latin.] To drive on towards a point; to urge forward; to press on.

So Myrrha's mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide. Dryden's Ovid.

The surge impell'd me on a craggy coast. Pope.

Propitious gales
Attend thy voyage, and impel thy sails. Pope's Odyssey.

A mightier pow'r the strong direction sends,
And several men impels to several ends;
This drives them constant to a certain coast. Pope.

IMPELLENT, n. f. [impellens, Latin.] An impulsive power; a power that drives forward.

IMP

How such a variety of motions should be regularly managed, in such a wilderness of passages, by mere blind impulsion and material conveyances, I have not the least conjecture. Glauco.

To IMPEND, v. n. [impender, Lat.] To hang over; to be at hand; to press nearly.

It expresses our deep sorrow for our past sins, and our lively sense of God's impending wrath. Smaith's Sermons.

Ulysses comes, and death his steps attends. Pope's Odyssey.

No story I unfold of publick woes,
Nor bear advices of impending foes. Pope's Odyssey.

IMPENDENT, adj. [impedens, Latin.] Imminent; hanging over; pressing closely.

If the evil feared or impending be a greater sensible evil than the good, it over-rides the appetite to averfation. Hale.

Dreadful in arms, on Landen's glorious plain
Place Ormond's duke: impending in the air
Let his keen fabre, comet-like, appear. Prior.

IMPENDENCE, n. f. [from impendens.] The state of hanging over; near approach.

Though it be good, yet sometimes it is not safe to be attempted, by reason of the impudence of a greater sensible evil. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

IMPERATRABILITY, n. f. [impenetrabilis, Fr. from impenetrare.]

1. Quality of not being pierceable.
All bodies, so far as experience reaches, are either hard or may be hardened; and we have no other evidence of universal imperatrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception. Newton's Opt.
2. Infusceptibility of intellectual impression.

IMPERATRABLE, adj. [impenetrabilis, Fr. from impenetrare.]

1. Not to be pierced; not to be entered by any external force.
With hardning cold, and forming heat,
The cyclops did their strokes repeat,
Before th' imperatrable shield was wrought. Dryden.
2. Impervious; not admitting entrance.
Deep into some thick covert would I run,
Imperatrable to the stars or sun. Dryden.
The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in grofs: things, thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty in them, and are thought to be wrapped up in imperatrable obscurity. Locke.
3. Not to be taught; not to be informed.
4. Not to be affected; not to be moved.
It is the most imperatrable cur
That ever kept with men.
Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Some will never believe a proposition in divinity, if any thing can be said against it: they will be credulous in all affairs of life, but imperatrable by a sermon of the gospel. Taylor.

IMPERATRABLY, adv. [from imperatrabilis.] With hardness to a degree incapable of impression.

Blunt the sense, and fit it for a skull
Of solid proof, imperatrably dull. Pope's Dunciad.

IMPERITENCY, n. f. [impenitency, Fr. in and penitency.] Obduracy; want of remorse for crimes; final disregard of God's threatenings or mercy.

Where one man ever comes to repent, a thousand end their days in final impenitence. South's Sermons.

Before the revelation of the gospel the wickedness and impenitency of the heathens was a much more excusable thing, because they were in a great measure ignorant of the rewards of another life. Tillotson's Sermons.

He will advance from one degree of wickedness and impenitence to another, till at last he becomes hardened without remorse. Rogers's Sermons.

IMPERITENT, adj. [impenitent, Fr. in and penitent.] Finally negligent of the duty of repentance; obdurate.

Our Lord in anger hath granted some impenitent mens requests; as, on the other side, the apostle's suit he hath of favour and mercy not granted. Hooker.

They dy'd
Imperitent, and left a race behind
Like to themselves. Milton.

When the reward of penitents, and punishment of impenitents, is once assented to as true, 'tis impossible but the mind of man should wish for the one, and have dislikes to the other. Hammond.

IMPERITENTLY, adv. [from imperitent.] Obdurately; without repentance.

The condition required of us is a confellation of all the gospel graces, every one of them rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully, and impenitently lived and died in. Hammond.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets! Pope.

IMPERIOUS, adj. [in and perna, Latin.] Wanting wings.

It is generally received an earwing hath no wings, and is reckoned amongst impenious insects; but he that shall with a needle put aside the short and sheathy cases on their back, may draw forth two wings, larger than in many flies. Brown.

IMP

IMPERATE, adj. [imperatus, Latin.] Done with conscious-ness; done by direction of the mind.

The elicit internal acts of any habit may be quick and vigorous, when the external imperate acts of the same habit utterly cease. South's Sermons.

Those natural and involuntary actions are not done by deliberation, yet they are done by the energy of the soul and instrumentality of the spirits, as well as those imperate acts, wherein we see the empire of the soul. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

IMPERATIVE, adj. [imperativus, Fr. imperativus, Latin.] Commanding; expressive of command.

The verb is formed in a different manner, to signify the intention of commanding, forbidding, allowing, disallowing, intreating; which likewise, from the principal use of it, is called the imperative mood. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

IMPERCEPTIBLE, adj. [imperceptibilis, Fr. in and perceptibilis.] Not to be discovered; not to be perceived; small; subtle; quick or slow so as to elude observation.

Some things are in their nature imperceptible by our sense; yea, and the more refined parts of material existence, which, by reason of their subtilty, escape our perception. Hale.

In the sudden changes of his subject with almost imperceptible connections, the Theban poet is his master. Dryden.

The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling flames, or the gliding of a snake upon the ground: they must be almost imperceptible to the touch, and even. Dryden.

The alterations in the globe are very flight, and almost imperceptible, and such as tend to the benefit of the earth. Wood.

IMPERCEPTIBLENESS, n. f. [from imperceptibilis.] The quality of eluding observation.

Many excellent things there are in nature, which, by reason of their subtilty and imperceptibility to us, are not so much as within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.

IMPERCEPTIBLY, adv. [from imperceptibilis.] In a manner not to be perceived.

Upon reading of a fable we are made to believe we advise ourselves: the moral insinuates itself imperceptibly, we are taught by surprize, and become wiser and better unawares. Add.

IMPERFECT, adj. [imperfectus, Fr. imperfectus, Latin.]

1. Not complete; not absolutely finished; defective. Used either of persons or things.
Something he left imperfect in the state,
Which, since his coming forth, is thought of,
Which brought the kingdom so much fear and danger,
That his return was most required. Shaksp.
Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination; but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the structure of reason. Ben. Johnson.
The middle action, which produceth imperfect bodies, is fitly called, by some of the ancients, iniquation or incompletion, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.
The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of meteors, by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks. Brown.
There are divers things we agree to be knowledge by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure. Boyle.
A marcor is either imperfect, tending to a greater withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an intire wasting of the body, excluding all cure. Harvey on Consumptions.
The still-born founds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the fair ring tongue. Dryden.
As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men. Locke.
2. Frail; not completely good.

IMPERFECTION, n. f. [imperfectio, Fr. from imperfectus.] Defect; failure; fault, whether physical or moral; whether of persons or things.

Laws, as all other things human, are many times full of imperfectio; and that which is supposed behoveful unto men, prove oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker.

The duke had taken to wife Anne Stanhope, a woman for many imperfectio intolerable; but for pride monstrous. Hayward.

Imperfectio would not be half so much taken notice of, if vanity did not make proclamation of them. L'Estrange.

The world is more apt to censure than applaud, and himself fuller of imperfectio than virtues. Addison's Spectator.

These are rather to be imputed to the simplicity of the age than to any imperfectio in that divine poet. Addison.

IMPERFECTLY, adv. [from imperfectus.] Not completely; not fully; not without failure.

Should sinking nations summon you away,
Maria's love might justify your stay;
Imperfectly the many vows are paid,
Which for your safety to the gods were made. Stepney.
Those would hardly understand language or reason to any tolerable degree; but only a little and imperfectly about things familiar. Locke.

IMPERIONABLE

IMP

IMPULSE. n. f. [impulsus, Latin.]
 1. Communicated force; the effect of one body acting upon another. If these little impulses set the great wheels of devotion on work, the largeness and height of that shall not at all be prejudiced by the smallness of its occasion. South's Sermons.

Bodies produce ideas in us manifestly by impulse. Locke.
 Bodies, from the impulse of a fluid, can only gravitate in proportion to their surfaces, and not according to their quantity of matter, which is contrary to experience. Cheyne.

2. Influence acting upon the mind; motive; idea.
 Mean time, by Jove's impulse, Mezentius arm'd, Succeeded Turnus. Dryden's Æn.

These were my natural impulses for the undertaking; but there was an accidental motive, which was full as forcible. Dry.
 Moses saw the bush burn without being consumed, and heard a voice out of it: this was something, besides finding an impulse upon his mind to go to Pharaoh, that he might bring his brethren out of Egypt. Locke.

3. Hostile impression.
 Like two great rocks against the raging tide,
 Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide,
 Sustain th' impulse, and receive the war. Prior.

IMPULSION. n. f. [impulsio, Fr. impulsio, Latin.]
 1. The agency of body in motion upon body.
 The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without found; for that found that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulsion of the air. Bacon's Natural History.

To the impulsion there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.
 But thou didst lead
 Divine impulsion, prompting how thou might'st Find some occasion to infect our foci. Milton's Agonistes.

IMPULSIVE. adj. [impulsif, Fr. from impulse.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellent.
 Nature and duty bind him to obedience;
 But those being placed in a lower sphere,
 His fierce ambition, like the highest mover,
 Has hurried with a strong impulsive motion Against their proper course. Denham's Sophy.

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is perfectly free grace. South's Sermons.

Poor men! poor papers! we and they Do some impulsive force obey,
 And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.

IMPUNITY. n. f. [impunitas, Fr. impunitas, Latin.] Freedom from punishment; exemption from punishment.
 In the condition of subjects they will gladly continue, as long as they may be protected and justly governed, without oppression on the one side, or impunity on the other. Davies.

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar will never be brought to believe, that there is a crime where they see no penalty. Addison's Freeholder.

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their ill-gotten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themselves or dependents. Atterbury's Sermons.

IMPU'RE. adj. [impur, Fr. impurus, Latin.]
 1. Contrary to sanctity; unhallowed; unholy.
 No more can impure man retain and move
 In that pure region of a worthy love,
 Than earthly substance can unforc'd aspire,
 And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.

Hypocrites austere talk,
 Condemning as impure what God has made
 Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton.

2. Unchaste.

IN

2. Unchaste.
If black scandal, or foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meek enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shaksp. R. III.
One could not devise a more proper hell for an impure spirit, than that which Plato has touched upon. Addison.
3. Feculent; foul with extraneous mixtures; droffy.
IMPURELY. adv. [from impure] With impurity.
IMPURENESS. n. f. [impureté, French; impuritas, Lat. from impurity.] Impure.

Cleanse the alimentary duct by vomiting and clysters, the impurities of which will be carried into the blood. Arbutnot.
TO IMPURPLE. v. a. [empourprer, Fr. from purple.] To make red; to colour as with purple.
Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of Jasper shone, Impurpled with celestial roses, smil'd. Milton.
- IMPUTABLE*. adj. [from impute] Imputable.
1. Chargeable upon any one.
That first sort of foolishness is imputable to them. Scud.
2. Accessible; chargeable with a fault. Not proper.
If the wife departs from her husband, through any default of his, as on the account of cruelty; then he shall be compelled to allow her alimony; for the law deems her to be a dutiful wife as long as the fault lies at his door, and she is in no wife imputable. Aliff's Poregon.
IMPUTABLENESS. n. f. [from imputable.] The quality of being imputable.
'Tis necessary to the imputableness of an action, that it be avoidable. Norris.
- IMPUTATION*. n. f. [imputation, Fr. from impute.]
1. Attribution of any thing: generally of ill.
Trust to me, Ulysses;
Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd
In this wild action. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
If a son that is sent by his father about merchandize, do fall into some lewd action, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father. Shaksp. Cressida.
To use intellctions and volitions in the infinite essence, as hypotheses, is allowable; but a rigorous imputation is derogatory to him, and arrogant in us. Clavel, Scely.
I have formerly said that I could distinguish your writings from those of any others: 'tis now time to clear myself from any imputation of self-conceit on that subject. Dryden.
2. Sometimes of good.
If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shaksp. Cressida.
3. Censure; reproach.
Whatever happens they also the least feel that scourge of vulgar imputation, which notwithstanding they deserve. Hooker.
Let us be careful to guard ourselves against these groundless imputations of our enemies, and to rise above them. Addison.
Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. Swift.
4. Hint; reflection.
Antonio is a good man.
—Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?
—No, no; my meaning is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
- IMPUTATIVE*. adj. [from impute.] That which may impute. Aliff's Poregon.
- TO IMPUTE*. v. a. [imputer, Fr. impute; Latin.]
1. To charge upon; to attribute: generally ill; sometimes good.
It was imputed to him for righteousness. Ro. iv. 22.
Men in their innovations should follow the example of time, which innovateth but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived; for otherwise whatsoever is new and unlooked for, ever mends some, and pairs others; and he that is holpen takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt for a wrong, imputeth it to the author. Bacon's Essay.
I made it by your persuasion, to satisfy those who imputed it to folly. Temple.
Impute your dangers to our ignorance. Dryden.
This obscurity cannot be imputed to want of language in so great a master of style. Locke.
I have read a book imputed to lord Bathurst, called a dissertation on parties. Swift.
2. To reckon to one what does not properly belong to him.
Thy merit
Imputed shall absolve them who renounce
Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds. Milton.
- IMPUTER*. n. f. [from impute.] He that imputes.
IN. prep. [in, Latin.]
1. Noting the place where any thing is present.

IN

- In school of love are all things taught we see;
There learn'd this maid of arms the treful guile. Fairfax.
Is this place here not sufficient strong
To guard us in? Daniel's Civil War.
2. Noting the state present at any time.
The other is only by error and misconception named the ordinance of Jesus Christ: no one proof is yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in very deed. Hooker.
Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes. Shaksp.
Sir Edmond Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confederates, are in arms. Shaksp. R. III.
Danger before, and in, and after the act,
You needs must grant is great. Daniel's Civil War.
However it be in knowledge, I may truly say it is of no use at all in probabilities; for the assent there, being to be determined by the preponderancy, after a due weighing of all the proofs on both sides, nothing is so unfit to assist the mind in that as syllogism.
In all likelihood I brought all my limbs out of the bed, which, 'tis probable, he has not done off the breach. Locke.
God hath made our eternal and temporal interests, in most cases, very consistent. Snabridge's Sermons.
None was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those whom they had most abused. Letter to Publ. of Dancid.
3. Noting the time.
When we would consider eternity a parte ante, what do we but, beginning from ourselves and the present time we are in, repeat in our minds the ideas of years or ages past, with a prospect of proceeding in such addition with all the infinity of numbers? Locke.
4. Noting power.
To feed mens souls, quoth he, is not in man. Hubb. Tale.
5. Noting proportion.
Let usury in general be reduced to five in the hundred, and let that rate be proclaimed to be free and current. Bacon.
I cannot but lament the common course, which, at least, nine in ten of those who enter into the ministry are obliged to enter. Swift.
6. Concerning.
I only consider what he, who is allowed to have carried this argument farthest, has said in it. Locke.
7. For the sake. A solemn phrase.
Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat does this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great? Shaksp. Julius Caesar.
In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him our city. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Now, in the name of honour, sir, I beg you
That I may see your father's death reveng'd. Dryden.
8. Noting cause.
King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shaksp. H. VI.
9. In that. Because.
Some things they do in that they are men; in that they are wife men, and christian men, some things; some things in that they are men misled, and blinded with error. Hooker.
He cannot brook such disgrace well, as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search, and against my will. Shaksp. As you like it.
10. In as much. Since; seeing that.
Those things are done voluntarily by us, which other creatures do naturally, in as much as we might stay our doing of them if we would. Hooker.
- IN*. adv.
1. Within some place; not out.
How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable person; especially if he be arrived at that consummate and robust degree of falsehood as to play in and out, and throw tricks with oaths, the sacred bonds which the conscience of man can be bound with. South's Sermons.
I fear me, you'll be in 'till then. Shaksp. As you like it.
We know the worst can come: 'tis thought upon:
We cannot shift being in, we must go on.
These pragmatical flies value themselves for being in at every thing, and are found at last to be just good for nothing. L'Estr.
2. Placed in some state.
Poor rogues talk of court news,
Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shaksp.
Must never patriot then declaim at gin,
Unless, good man, he has been fairly in. Pope.
3. Noting entrance.
Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shaksp. As you like it.
He's too big to go in there: what shall I do?
—Let me see't; I'll in: I'll in: follow your friend's advice.
I'll in. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
In the said cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve larger than could be introduced in at either of those holes. Woodward on P'syll.

INA

5. Into any place.
Is it not more eligible to come in with a smooth gale, than to be tossed at head with a storm. Collier.
Next fill the hole with its own earth again,
And trample with thy feet, and tread it in. Dryd. Georg.
6. Close; home.
The posture of left-handed fencers is so different from that of the right-handed, that you run upon their swords if you push forward; and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Tatler.
- IN* has commonly in composition a negative or privative sense, as in the Latin: so, active denotes that which acts, inactive that which does not act. In before r is changed into r; as irregular: before l into l; as illative: and into m before some other consonants; as improbable.
INABILITY. n. f. [in and ability.] Impuissance; impotence; want of power.
If no natural nor casual inability cross their desires, they always delighting to insure themselves with actions most beneficial to others, cannot but gather great experience, and thro' experience the more wisdom. Hooker.
Neither ignorance nor inability can be pretended; and what plea can we offer to divine justice to prevent condemnation?
INABSTINENCE. n. f. [in and abstinence.] Intemperance; want of power to abstain.
Diseases die; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear, that thou may'st know
What misery the inabstinence of Eve Shall bring on man. Milt. Par. Lost.
- INACCESSIBLE*. adj. [inaccessibilis, Fr. in and accessibilis.] Not to be reached; not to be approached.
That in this dark inaccessibilis,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time. Shaksp. As you like it.
Many other hidden parts of nature, even of a far lower form, are inaccessible to us. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
There shall we clearly see the ends and uses of these things, which here were either too subtle for us to penetrate, or too remote and inaccessible for us to come to any distinct view of.
RAY on the Creation.
This part, which is so noble, is not altogether inaccessible; and that an easy way may be found to it, 'tis to consider nature and to copy her. Dryden.
- INACCUACY*. n. f. [from inaccurate.] Want of exactness.
INACCUATE. adj. [in and accurate.] Not exact; not accurate. It is used sometimes of persons, but more frequently of performances.
INACTION. n. f. [inaction, Fr. in and action.] Cessation from labour; forbearance of labour.
The times and amusements past are not more like a dream to me, than those which are present; I lie in a refreshing kind of inaction. Pope.
- INACTIVE*. adj. [in and active.] Not busy; not diligent; idle; indolent; sluggish.
INACTIVELY. adv. [from inactive.] Idly; without labour; without motion; sluggishly.
In seasons of perfect freedom, mark how your son spends his time; whether he inactively loiters it away, when left to his own inclination. Locke.
- INACTIVITY*. n. f. [in and activity.] Idleness; rest; sluggishness.
A doctrine which manifestly tends to discourage the endeavours of men, to introduce a lazy inactivity, and neglect of the ordinary means of grace. Rogers's Sermons.
Virtue, conceal'd within our breast,
Is inactivity at best. Swift.
- INADEQUATE*. adj. [in and adequatus, Latin.] Not equal to the purpose; defective; falling below the due proportion.
Remorse for vice
Not paid, or paid inadequate in price,
What farther means can reason now direct? Dryden.
Inadequate ideas are such, which are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes to which they are referred. Locke.
- INADEQUATELY*. adv. [from inadequate.] Defectively; not completely.
These pores they may either exactly fill, or but inadequately. Boyle.
- INADVERTENCE*. n. f. [inadvertentia, French; from inadvertent.] advertent.
INADVERTENCY. adj. [inadvertent.] Negligence; inattention.
There is a vast difference between them; indeed, as vast as between inadvertency and deliberation, between surprize and set purpose. South.
From an habitual heedless inadvertency, men are so intent upon the present that they mind nothing else. L'Estrange.
2. Act or effect of negligence.
Many persons have lain under great and heavy scandals, which have taken their first rise only from some inadvertency or indiscretion. Government of the Tongue.
The productions of a great genius, with many lapses and

INA

- inadvertencies*, are infinitely preferable to the works of an inferior kind of author, which are scrupulously exact. Addison.
- INADVERTENT*. adj. [in and advertens, Latin.] Negligent; careless.
- INADVERTENTLY*. adv. [from inadvertent.] Carelessly; negligently.
Aristotle mentions Telegonus as the son of Circe and Ulysses, who afterwards slew his father with the bone of a fish inadvertently. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground. Clarissa.
- INALIENABLE*. adj. [in and alienable.] That cannot be alienated.
- INALIMENTAL*. adj. [in and alimental.] Affording no nourishment.
Dulcoration importeth a degree to nourishment; and the making of things inalimental to be become alimental, may be an experiment of great profit for making new victual. Bacon.
- INAMISSIBLE*. adj. [inamissibilis, French; in and amissum, Lat.] Not to be lost.
These advantages are inamissible. Hammond.
- INANE*. adj. [inanis, Latin.] Empty; void.
We sometimes speak of place in the great inane, beyond the confines of the world. Locke.
- TO INANIMATE*. v. a. [in and anima, Latin.] To animate; to quicken. This word is not in use.
There's a kind of world remaining still,
Though the which did inanimate and fill
The world be gone; yet in this last long night
Her ghost doth walk, that is, a glimmering light. Donne.
- INANIMATE*. adj. [inanimatus, Latin; inanimé, French.] INANIMATED. adj. [inanimatus, Latin; inanimé, French.] Void of life; without animation.
The spirits of animate bodies are all in some degree kindled; but inanimate bodies have their spirits no whit inflamed. Bacon's Natural History.
- The golden goddess, present at the pray'r,
Well knew he meant th' inanimate fair,
And gave the sign of granting.
All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves. Bentley.
They can neither subtil nor be produced by the powers of mechanism; for both require the constant influence of a principle different from that which governs the inanimate part of the universe. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
- From roofs when Verrio's colours fall,
And leave inanimate the naked wall,
Still in thy song should vanquish'd France appear. Pope.
- INANITION*. n. f. [inanition, Fr. inanis, Lat.] Emptiness of body; want of fulness in the vessels of the animal.
Weakness which attends fevers proceeds from too great fulness in the beginning, and too great inanition in the latter end of the disease. Arbutnot on Diet.
- INANITY*. n. f. [from inanis, Latin.] Emptiness; void space.
This opinion excludes all such inanity, and admits no vacuities but so little ones as no body whatever can come to, but will be bigger than they, and must touch the corporal parts which those vacuities divide. Digby on Bodies.
- INAPETENCY*. n. f. [in and appetentia, Latin.] Want of stomach or appetite.
INAPPLICABLE. adj. [in and applicabile.] Not to be put to a particular use.
INAPPLICATION. n. f. [inapplication, Fr. in and application.] Indolence; negligence.
- INARABLE*. adj. [in and aro, Latin.] Not capable of tilage. Diät.
- TO INARCH*. v. a. [in and arch.]
Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother-tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmines, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

INB

INARTICULATE, adj. [inarticulé, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness like that of the syllables of human speech.
Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters.
By the harmony of words we elevate the mind to a sense of devotion; as our solemn music, which is inarticulate poetry, does in churches.
INARTICULATELY, adv. [from inarticulate.] Not distinctly.
INARTICULATENESS, n. f. [from inarticulate.] Confusion of sounds; want of distinctness in pronouncing.
INARTIFICIAL, adj. [in and artificial.] Contrary to art.
I have ranked this among the effects; and it may be thought inartificial to make it the cause also.
INARTIFICIALLY, adv. [from inartificial.] Without art; in a manner contrary to the rules of art.
This lofty humour is clumsily and inartificially managed, when it is affected by those of a self-denying profession.
INATTENTION, n. f. [inattention, Fr. in and attention.] Disregard; negligence; neglect.
Persons keep out of the reach of the reproaches of the ministry, or hear with such inattention or contempt as renders them of little effect.
We see a strange inattention to this most important prospect.
Novel lays attract our raptur'd ears;
But old, the mind with inattention hears.
INATTENTIVE, adj. [in and attentive.] Careless; negligent; regardless.
If we indulge the frequent roving of passions, we shall procure an unsteady and inattentive habit.
INAUDIBLE, adj. [in and audible.] Not to be heard; void of sound.
Let's take the infant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick it decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them.
INAUGURATE, v. a. [inauguro, Latin.] To consecrate; to invest with a new office by solemn rites; to begin with good omens; to begin.
Those beginnings of years were propitious to him, as if kings did chuse remarkable days to inaugurate their favours, that they may appear acts as well of the time as of the will.
INAUGURATION, n. f. [inauguration, Fr. inauguro, Latin.] Investiture by solemn rites.
The royal olive was solemnly sworn, at his inauguration, to observe these things inviolable.
At his regal inauguration his old father resigned the kingdom to him.
INAURATION, n. f. [inauro, Latin.] The act of gilding or covering with gold.
The Romans had the art of gilding after our manner; but some sort of their inaurations, or gilding, must have been dearer than ours.
INAUSPICIOUS, adj. [in and auspicious.] Ill-omened; unlucky; unfortunate.
Oh here
I will set up my everlasting rest;
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh.
Though heaven's inauspicious eye
Lay black on love's nativity,
Her eye a strong appeal can give;
Beauty, smiles, and love shall live.
The stars feel not the diseases their inauspicious influence produces.
With inauspicious love a wretched swain
Pursu'd the fairest nymph of all the plain;
She plung'd him hopeless in a deep despair.
When we say the bowl is round, the boy is witty, there are proper or inherent modes; for they have a sort of inbeing in the substance itself, and do not arise from the addition of any other substance to it.
INBORN, adj. [in and born.] Innate; implanted by nature.
Inborn to all, I fought my needful food.
All passions being inborn with us, we are almost equally judges of them.
Some Carolina, to heaven's dictates true,
Thy inborn worth with conscious eyes shall see,
And slight th' imperial diadem for thee.
INBREATHED, adj. [in and breath.] Inspired; infused by inspiration.
Blest pair of syrens, pledges of heav'n's joy,
Sphere-born harmonious sisters, voice and verse,
Wed your divine sounds, and mixt power employ.
Dead things with inbreath'd sense able to pierce.
INBRED, adj. [in and bred.] Produced within; hatched or generated within.

INC

My inbred enemy
Forth issu'd.
A man thinks better of his children than they deserve; but there is an impulse of tenderness, and there must be some esteem for the setting of that inbred affection at work.
But he unmov'd contemns their idle threat;
And inbred worth doth boasting valour slight.
TO INCAGE, v. a. [in and cage.] To coop up; to shut up; to confine in a cage, or any narrow space.
And yet incaged in so small a verge,
Thy waste is no whit lesser than thy lord's.
It made my imprisonment a pleasure;
Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds Conceive.
INCALESCE, v. i. [incalisco, Latin.] The state of growth.
INCALESCENCY, n. f. [incalisco, Latin.] The state of growth; ing warm; warmth; incipient heat.
Averroes restrained his hilarity, making no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incaliscence, and regulated effusion from wine.
The oil preserves the ends of the bones from incaliscence, which they, being solid bodies, would necessarily contract from a swift motion.
INCANTATION, n. f. [incantation, Fr. incanto, Lat.] Charms uttered by fingering; enchantment.
My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hell too strong.
By Adam's hearkening to his wife, mankind, by that her incantation, became the subject of labour, sorrows, and death.
The great wonders of witches, their carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, are reported to be wrought, not by incantations or ceremonies, but by anointing themselves all over, move a man to think that these fables are the effects of imagination; for ointments, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely.
The name of a city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms and incantations.
The nuptial rights his outrage frant attends;
The dow'r desir'd is his transfigur'd friends;
The incantation backward the repeats,
Inverts her rod, and what she did, defeats.
The commands which our religion hath imposed on its followers are not like the absurd ceremonies of pagan idolatry, the frivolous rites of their initiations and worship, that might look like incantations and magick, but had no tendency to make mankind the happier.
INCANTATORY, adj. [from incanto, Latin.] Dealing by enchantment; magical.
Fortune-tellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the like incantatory impostors, daily delude them.
TO INCANTOR, v. a. [in and canton.] To unite to a canton or separate community.
When the cantons of Bern and Zurich propoed the incorporating Geneva in the cantons, the Roman catholics, fearing the protestant interest, propoed the incantoring of Constance as a counterpoise.
INCAPABILITY, n. f. [from incapabile.] Inability natural; INCAPABLENESS, n. f. [from incapabile.] Inability legal.

And when the rage allays, the rain begins.
The incessant weeping of my wife,
Forc'd me to seek delays.
If, by pray'r
Incessant, I could hope to change the will
Of him who all things can, I would not cease
To weary him with my assiduous cries.
In form, a herald of the king the flies,
From peer to peer, and thus incessant cries.
INCESANTLY, adv. [from incessant.] Without intermission; continually.
Both his hands most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And fain'd to wash themselves incessantly.
Who reads
Incessantly, and to his reading brings not
A spirit and judgment equal or superior.

It is neither a substance perfect, nor a substance inchoate, or in the way of perfection. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

INCHOATION, n. s. [inchoatus, Lat.] Inception; beginning.
 It discerneth of four kinds of causes; forces, frauds, crimes various of felonate, and the inchoations or middle acts towards crimes capital, not actually perpetrated. Bacon's Henry VII.

The setting on foot some of those arts in those parts would be looked upon as the first inchoation of them, which yet would be but their reviving. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

INCHOATIVE, adj. [inchoative, Fr. inchoativus, Latin.] Inceptive; noting inchoation or beginning.

To INCISE, v. a. [from incido, to cut, Latin.]
 Medicines are said to incise which consist of pointed and sharp particles; as acids, and moist salts, by which the particles of other bodies are divided from one another: thus some expectorating medicines are said to incise or cut the phlegm.

The menes are promoted by all saponaceous substances, which incise the mucus in the first passages. Arbutnot.

INCIDENCE, n. s. [incido, to fall, Latin; incidence, French.]
INCIDENCY, n. s. [incido, to fall, Latin; incidence, French.]

1. The direction with which one body strikes upon another, and the angle made by that line, and the plane struck upon, is called the angle of incidence. In the occurrences of two moving bodies, their incidence is said to be perpendicular or oblique, as their directions or lines of motion make a straight line or an oblique angle at the point of contact. Quincy.

In mirrors there is the like angle of incidence, from the object to the glass, and from the glass to the eye. Bacon.

In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions, whether it be that some of the incident rays are refracted more and others less constantly, or one and the same ray is by refraction disturbed. Newton's Opt.

The permanent whiteness argues, that in like incidences of the rays there is no such separation of the emerging rays. Newton.

He enjoys his happy state most when he communicates it, and receives a more vigorous joy from the reflection than from the direct incidence of his happiness. Norris.

2. [Incident, Latin.] Accident; hap; casualty.
 What incidence thou dost guess of harm declare,
 Is creeping towards me. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

INC

INCIDENT, adj. [incident, Fr. incident, Latin.]
 1. Casual; fortuitous; occasional; happening accidentally; falling in beside the main design; happening beside expectation.

As the ordinary course of common affairs is disposed of by general laws, so likewise mens' rarer incident necessities and utilities should be with special equity considered. Hooker.

I would note in children not only their articulate answers, but likewise smiles and frowns upon incident occasions. Wotton.

In a complex proposition the predicate or subject is sometimes made complex by the pronouns who, which, whose, whom, &c. which make another proposition: as, every man, who is pious, shall be saved; Julius, whose surname was Cæsar, overcame Pompey: bodies, which are transparent, have many pores. Here the whole proposition is called the primary or chief, and the additional proposition is called an incident proposition.

2. Happening; apt to happen.
 Confrancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship as overlooks all those failures of kindness, that through passion, incident to human nature, a man may be sometimes guilty of. South's Sermons.

INCIDENT, n. s. [incident, Fr. from the adjective.] Something happening beside the main design; casualty.

His wisdom will fall into it as an incident to the point of lawfulness. Bacon's Holy War.

INCLEMENCY, n. s. [inclemencia, Fr. inclementia, Latin.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,
 In heaven's inclemency some ease we find;
 Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left. Dryden.

INCLEMENT, adj. [in and clement, Latin.] Unmerciful; unpitying; void of tenderness; harsh.

Teach us further by what means to shun
 Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail and snow. Milton.

Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land;
 Precipitous to my wants, a vest supply,
 To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky. Pope.

INCLINABLE, adj. [inclinabilis, Latin.]
 1. Having a propension of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition.

People are not always inclinable to the best. Spenser.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could cloy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

The gall and bitterness of certain mens' writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less inclinable to that truth which he himself should have honoured. Hooker.

Desire,
Inclinate now grown to touch or taste,
 Solicited her longing eye. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Having a tendency.
 If such a crust naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinate to fall this thousand years than the last; but if the crust was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally. Bentley.

INCLINATION, n. s. [inclination, inclination, Fr. inclination, Lat.]
 1. Tendency towards any point.

The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclination of half a degree answering to the fan's diameter. Newton's Opt.

INC

2. Natural aptness.
 Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclination of the soil leans that way. Addison.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.
 The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage. Clarendon.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet, in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they to often plead and rest in the honest and well-inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law. South's Sermons.

4. Love; affection.
 We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclination which princes have for painting. Dryden.

5. Disposition of mind.
 Bid him

INCOEXISTENCE. n. f. [in and coexistence.] The quality of not existing together; non-association of existence.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connection between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on. Locke.

INCOG. adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognite, Latin.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog, Depend upon it, he'll remain inco. Addison.

INCOGITANCY. n. f. [incogitantia, Latin.] Want of thought.

One man's fancies are laws to others, who convey them as such to their successors, who afterwards misname all unobviousness to their incogitant presumption. Boyle.

Next to the stupid and merely vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration. Duc of Picty.

INCOGITATIVE. adj. [in and *co*gitative.] Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our beards, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call *co*gitative and *inco*gitative beings. Locke.

INCOGNITO. adv. [incognitus, Latin.] In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago Since gods came down incognito. Prior.

INCOHERENCE. n. f. [in and coherence.]

INCOHERENCY. n. f. [in and coherence.]

1. Want of connection; incongruity; inconsequence; want of dependence of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handsomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

2. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaster be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass. Boyle.

INCOHERENT. adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependence of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

2. Without cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as puerous as those of marble or gravel. Watson.

INCOHERENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.] Inconsequently; inconsequentially.

The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally and incoherently. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

INCOMPATIBILITY. n. f. [properly incompatibility, in and compatibilis, Latin.] Inconsistency of one thing with another.

He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Watson.

The reason of the fires rests not upon the incompatibility of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intention or extension; but the incompatibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLE. adj. [incompatibilis, French; rather incompatibilis, as it is sometimes written; in and compatibilis, Lat.] Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else.

Fortune and love have ever been so incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Suckl.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good Christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompatible with the sincerity of the love of God? Hamm.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures. Bent.

INCOMPATIBLY. adv. [from incompatibilis, from incompatibilis.] Inconsistently.

INCOMPETENCY. n. f. [incompetencia, Fr. in and competent.] Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shadow of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCOMPETENT. adj. [in and competent.] Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disabie their issues, upon false and incompetent pretences, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimacy. Bacon's H. VII.

Every speck does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove the grosser faults of others. Government of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it, must be left to the opinion of the world, in spite of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryden.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Bentley.

INCOMPETENTLY. adv. [from incompetent.] Unfitly; unduly.

INCOMPLETE. adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleaseth him in mercy to account himself incomplete and maimed without us. Hooker.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others, especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INC

INCOMPLETE. n. f. [from incomplete.] Imperfection; unfinished state.

The incompleteness of our seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness; but of an intire possession. Boyle.

1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictory temper.

Self-conceit produces peevishness and incompliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent. Tillson's Sermons.

2. Refusal of compliance.

Consider the vast disproportion between the worst inconveniences that can attend our incompliance with men; and the eternal displeasure of an offended God. Kezers.

INCOMPOSED. adj. [in and composed.] Disturbed; discomposed; disordered.

Somewhat incomposed they are in their trimmings, and extraordinary tender of their young ones. Hewel.

IMCOMPOSIBILITY. n. f. [from impossibilis.] Quality of being not possible but by the negation or destruction of something; inconsistency with something.

The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same fineness in any modification. More.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally impossible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude, yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that arithmetical from individuals already actually distinguished. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

IMCOMPOSIBLE. adj. [in, com, and possibilis.] Not possible together; not possible but by the negation of something else.

IMCOMPREHENSIBILITY. n. f. [incomprehensibilis, Fr. from incomprehensibilis.] Unconceivableness; superiority to human understanding.

IMCOMPREHENSIBLE. adj. [incomprehensibilis, Fr. in and comprehensibilis.]

1. Not to be conceived; not to be fully understood.

His precepts tend to the improving and perfecting the most valuable part of us, and annexing incomprehensible rewards as an eternal weight of glory. Hammond.

One thing more is incomprehensible in this matter. Locke.

The laws of vegetation, life, sustenance, and propagation are the arbitrary pleasure of God, and may vary in manners incomprehensible to our imaginations. Bentley.

2. Not to be contained. Not now used.

Preference every where is the sequel of an infinite and incomprehensible substance; for what can be every where but that which can no where be comprehended? Hooker.

IMCOMPREHENSIBleness. n. f. [from incomprehensibilis.] Unconceivableness.

I might argue from God's incomprehensibleness: if we could believe nothing but what we have ideas of, it would be impossible for us to believe God is incomprehensible. Watts.

IMCOMPREHENSIBLY. adv. [from incomprehensibilis.] In a manner not to be conceived.

We cannot but be assured that the God, of whom and from whom are all things, is incomprehensibly infinite. Locke.

IMCOMPRESSIBLE. adj. [incompressibilis, Fr. in and compressibilis.] Not capable of being compressed into less space.

Their hardness is the reason why water is incompressible, when the air lodged in it is exhausted. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

They ascribe to God, in relation to every man, an eternal, unchangeable, and inconditionate decree of election or reprobation. Boyle.

INCONFORMITY. n. f. [in and conformity.] Incompliance with the practice of others.

We have thought their opinion to be, that utter inconformity with the church of Rome was not an extremity whereunto we should be drawn for a time, but the very mediocrity itself, wherein they meant we should ever continue. Hooker.

INCONFUSION. n. f. [in and confusion.] Distinctness.

The cause of the confusion in founds, and the inconfusion in species visible, is, for that the light worketh in right lines, and so there can be no coincidence in the eye; but founds that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other. Bacon.

INCONGRUENCE. n. f. [in and congruence.] Unsuitableness; want of adaptation.

Humidity is but relative, and depends upon the congruity or incongruence of the component particles of the liquor to the pores of the bodies it touches. Boyle.

INCONGRUITY. n. f. [incongruitas, Fr. from incongruous.] 1. Unsuitableness of one thing to another.

The fathers make use of this acknowledgment of the incongruity of images to the Deity, from thence to prove the incongruity of the worship of them. Stillingsfleet.

2. Inconsistency; inconsequence; absurdity; impropriety.

To avoid absurdities and incongruities, is the same law established for both arts: the painter is not to paint a cloud at the bottom of a picture, nor the poet to place what is proper to the end in the beginning of a poem. Dryden.

3. Disagreement of parts; want of symmetry.

Is discord and rude incongruity;
She, the is dead, she's dead. Donne.

INCONGRUOUS. adj. [incongruus, Fr. in and congruus.] 1. Unsuitable; not fitting.

INCONSIDERABLE. adj. [in and considerable.] Void of the sense of good and evil; without influence of conscience. So inconsiderable are these common people, and so little feeling have they of God, or their own souls good. Spenser.

INC

INCONSEQUENCE. n. f. [inconsequens, Fr. inconsequens, Lat.] Inconclusiveness; want of just inference.

This he bestows the name of many fallacies upon; and runs on with shewing the inconsequence of it, as though he did in earnest believe it were an impertinent answer. Stillingsfleet.

INCONSEQUENT. adj. [in and consequens, Lat.] Without just conclusion; without regular inference.

The ground he assumes is ungrounded, and his illation from thence deduced inconsequent. Hobbes on Providence.

Men rest not in false apprehensions without absurd and inconsequent deductions from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erecting conclusions no way inferable from their premises. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCONSIDERABLE. adj. [in and considerable.] Unworthy of notice; unimportant.

No, I am an inconsiderable fellow, and know nothing. Denham's Sophy.

The most inconsiderable of creatures may at some time or other come to revenge itself upon the greatest. Elphinstone.

Casting my eyes upon the ants, continually taken up with a thousand cares, very inconsiderable with respect to us, but of the greatest importance for them, they appeared to me worthy of my curiosity. Addison.

May not planets and comets perform their motions more freely, and with less resistance, in this ethereal medium than in any fluid, which fills all space adequately without leaving any pores, and by consequence is much denser than quicksilver or gold? And may not its resistance be so small as to be inconsiderable? Newton's Opt.

If we were under any real fear of the papists, it would be hard to think us so stupid not to be equally apprehensive with others, since we are likely to be the greatest sufferers; but we look upon them to be altogether as inconsiderable as the women and children. Swift.

Let no sin appear small or inconsiderable by which an almighty God is offended, and eternal salvation endangered. Regis.

INCONSIDERABLENESS. n. f. [from inconsiderable.] Small importance.

To those who are thoroughly convinced of the inconsiderableness of this short dying life, in comparison of that eternal state which remains for us in another life, the consideration of a future happiness is the most powerful motive. Tillotson.

From the consideration of our own smallness and inconsiderableness, in respect of the greatness and splendour of those glorious heavenly bodies, let us with the holy psalmist raise up our hearts. Ray on the Creation.

INCONSIDERATE. adj. [inconsideratus, Fr. inconsideratus, Latin.] 1. Careless; thoughtless; negligent; inattentive; inadvertent.

When thy inconsiderate hand
Flings ope this casement, with my trembling name,
Then think this name alive, and that thou thus
In it offend'st my genius. Donne.

That which now looks like justice, will be thought
An inconsiderate rashness. Denham's Sophy.

It is a very unhappy token of our corruption, that there should be any so inconsiderate among us as to sacrifice morality to politics. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Wanting due regard.

He who laid down his life for the redemption of the transgressions, which were under the first Testament, cannot be so inconsiderate of our frailties. Deay of Piety.

INCONSIDERATELY. adv. [from inconsiderate.] Negligently; thoughtlessly; inattentively.

The king, transported with just wrath, inconsiderately fighting and precipitating the charge, before his whole numbers came up, was slain in the pursuit. Bacon.

Joseph was delighted with Marianne's conversation, and endeavoured with all his art to set out the excess of Herod's passion for her; but when he still found her cold and incredulous, he inconsiderately told her the private orders he left behind. Addison's Spectator.

INCONSIDERATENESS. n. f. [from inconsiderate.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; want of thought; inadvertence; inattention.

If men do know and believe that there is such a being as God, not to demean ourselves towards him, as becomes our relation to him, is great stupidity and inconsiderateness. Tillotson.

INCONSIDERATION. n. f. [inconsideration, Fr. in and consideration.] Want of thought; inattention; inadvertence.

S. Gregory reckons uncleanness to be the parent of blindness of mind, inconsideration, precipitancy or giddiness in actions, and self-love. Taylor.

INCONSIDERING. adj. [in and consider.] Not consistent; incompatible with.

The persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsidering with the characters of mankind. Dryden's Duffess.

INCONSISTENCE. n. f. [from inconsistent.]

INCONSISTENCY. n. f. [from inconsistent.] 1. Such opposition as that one proposition infers the negation of the other; such contrariety that both cannot be together. There

INC

There is a perfect inconsistency between that which is of debt, and that which is of free gift. South's Sermons.

2. Absurdity in argument or narration; argument or narrative where one part destroys the other; self-contradiction.

3. Incongruity.

Mutability of temper, and inconsistency with ourselves, is the greatest weakness of human nature. Addison.

If a man would register all his opinions upon love, politics, religion and learning, what a bundle of inconsistencies and contradictions would appear at last! Swift.

4. Unsteadiness; changeableness.

INCONSISTENT. adj. [in and consistent.]

1. Incompatible; not suitable; incongruous.

Finding no kind of compliance, but sharp protestations against the demands, as inconsistent with conscience, justice, or religion, the conference broke off. Clarendon.

2. Contrary, so as that one infers the negation or destruction of the other.

The idea of an infinite space or duration is very obscure and confused, because it is made up of two parts very different, if not inconsistent. Locke.

3. Absurd; having parts of which one destroys the other.

INCONSISTENTLY. adv. [from inconsistent.] Absurdly; incongruously; with self-contradiction.

2. To oblige; to put under obligation.
INDEBTED. participial adj. [in and debt.] Obligated by something received; bound to restitution; having incurred a debt. It has to before the person to whom the debt is due, and for before the thing received.
If the course of politic affairs cannot in any good course go forward without fit instruments, and that which fitteth them be their virtues, let policy acknowledge itself indebted to religion, godliness being the chiefest top and well-spring of all true virtues, even as God is of all good things. Hooker.
Forgive us our sins; for we forgive every one that is indebted to us. Lu. xi. 4.
He for himself
Indebted and undone, has nought to bring.
This bliss allance may
Th' indebted nation bounteously repay. Graville.
Few consider how much we are indebted to government, because few can represent how wretched mankind would be without it. Atterbury's Sermons.
Let us represent to our souls the love and beneficence for which we daily stand indebted to God. Rogers's Sermon.
We are wholly indebted for them to our ancestors. Swift.
INDECENCY. n. f. [indecent, French.] Any thing unbecoming; any thing contrary to good manners; something wrong, but scarce criminal.
He will in vain endeavour to reform indecency in his pupil, which he allows in himself. Lake.
INDECENT. adj. [indecent, Fr. in and decent.] Unbecoming; unfit for the eyes or ears.
Till these men can prove these things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, the use of them, as established amongst us, is necessary. South.
Characters, where obscene words were proper in their mouths, but very indecent to be heard. Dryden.
INDECENTLY. adv. [from indecent.] Without decency; in a manner contrary to decency.
INDECIUOUS. adj. [in and deciduus.] Not falling; not

Not varied by terminations.
Pondo is an indeclinable word, and when it is joined to numbers it signifies lib. a. Arbutnot.
INDECOROUS. adj. [indecorus, Latin.] Indecent; unbecoming.
What can be more indecorous than for a creature to violate the commands, and trample upon the authority of that awful excellence to whom he owes his life? Norris.
INDECORUM. n. f. [Latin.] Indecency; something unbecoming.
INDEED. adv. [in and deed.]
1. In reality; in truth; in verity. Sidney.
Yet loving indeed, and therefore constant.
Though such assemblies be had indeed for religion's sake, hurtful nevertheless they may prove, as well in regard of their fittes to serve the turn of heretics, and such as privily will venture to inflit their poison into new minds. Hooker.
Some, who have not deferred judgment of death, have been for their goods sake caught up and carried straight to theough:
a thing indeed very pitiful and horrible. Speyer.
2. Above

IND

2. Above common rate.
Then didst thou utter, I am yours for ever; Shakespeare.
Tis grace indeed.
Borrow, in mean affairs, his subjects pains;
But things of weight and consequence indeed, Davies.
Himself doth in his chamber them debate.
Such sons of Abraham, how highly favour they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being Israelites indeed. South.
I were a beast, indeed, to do you wrong,
I who have lov'd and honour'd you so long. Dryden.
This is to be granted that. A particle of connection.
This limitation, indeed, of our author, will save those the labour who would look for Adam's heir amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery of one next heir amongst men. Locke.
There is nothing in the world more generally dreaded, and yet less to be feared, than death: indeed, for those unhappy men whose hopes terminate in this life, no wonder if the prospect of another seems terrible and amazing. Wake.
It is used sometimes as a slight assertion or recapitulation in a sense hardly perceptible or explicable.
This is indeed more criminal in thee. Shakespeare.
I said I thought it was confederacy between the juggler and the two servants; tho' indeed I had no reason so to think. Bac.
Some sons indeed, some very few we see,
Who keep themselves from this infection free. Dryden.
There is indeed no greater pleasure in visiting these magazines of war, after one has seen two or three of them. Addison.
5. It is used to note concession in comparisons.
Against these forces were prepared to the number of near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion. Bacon's War with Spain.

Unwearied; not tired; not exhausted by labour.
Who shall spread his airy flight,
Upborne with indefatigable wings, Milton.
Over the vast abrupt.
The ambitious person without life early and fit up late, and pursue his design with a constant indefatigable attendance: he must be infinitely patient and servile. South.
INDEFA'TIGABLY. adv. [from indefatigable.] Without weariness.
A man indefatigably zealous in the service of the church and state, and whose writings have highly deserved of both. Dryd.
INDEFEATIBILITY. n. f. [from indefeatable.] The quality of suffering no decay; of being subject to no defect.
INDEFEATIBLE. adj. [in and defatus, Lat.] Unfailing; not liable to defect or decay.
INDEFEATIBLE. adj. [indéfaisible, French.] Not to be cut off;
not to be vacated; irrevocable.
So indefeatable is our estate in those joys, that, if we do not sell it in reversion, we shall, when once invested, be beyond the possibility of ill husbandry. Dryden's Fanny.
INDEFEATIBLE. adj. [in and defesum, Lat.] What cannot be defended or maintained.
As they extend the rule of consulting Scripture to all the actions of common life, even so far as to the taking up of a sword, so it is altogether false and indefeatable. Sanderfon.
INDEFINITE. adj. [indefinitus, Latin; indefinit, Fr.]
1. Not determined; not limited; not settled.
Though a position should be wholly rejected, yet that negative is more pregnant of direction than an indefinite; as aches are more generative than dust. Bacon's Essays.
Her advancement was left indefinite; but thus, that it should be as great as ever any former queen of England had. Bacon.
Tragedy and picture are more narrowly circumscribed by place and time than the epic poem: the time of this last is left indefinite. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. Large beyond the comprehension of man, though not absolutely without limits.
Though it is not infinite, it may be indefinite; though it is not boundless in itself, it may be so to human comprehension. Speiser.
INDEFINITELY. adv. [from indefinite.]
1. Without any settled or determinate limitation.
We observe that custom, whereunto St. Paul alludeth, and whereof the fathers of the church in their writings make often mention, to shew indefinitely what was done; but not universally to bind for ever all prayers unto one only fashion of utterance. Hooker.
We conceive no more than the letter beareth; that is, four times, or indefinitely more than thrice. Brown's Vulg. Err.
A duty to which all are indefinitely obliged, upon some occasions, by the express command of God. Smalridge.
2. To a degree indefinite.
If the world be indefinitely extended, that is, so far as no human intellect can fancy any bounds of it, then what we see must be the least part. Ray on the Creation.
INDEFINITUDE. n. f. [from indefinite.] Quantity not limited by our understanding, though yet finite.
They arise to a strange and prodigious multitude, if not in-

IND

definitude, by their various positions, combinations, and conjunctions. Have's Origin of Mankind.
INDELIBERATE. adj. [indelibérat, Fr. in and deliberat.] Un-deliberated. } premeditated; done without consideration.
Actions proceeding from blandishments, or sweet persuasions, if they be indeliberated, as in children, who want the use of reason, are not presently free actions. Bramhall.
The love of God better can confit with the indeliberate commitments of many sins, than with an allowed perfittance in any one. Gove nment of the Tongue.
INDELIBLE. adj. [indeleble, Fr. indelible, Lat. in and delible.]
It should be written indelible.
1. Not to be blotted out or effaced.
Wilful perpetrations of unworthy actions brands with indelible characters the name and memory. King Charles.
Thy heedless fleece will drink the colour'd oil.
And spot indelible thy pocket foil. Gay's Trivia.
2. Not to be annulled.
All endued with indelible power from above to feed, to govern this household, and to consecrate pastors and stewards of it to the world's end. Sprat's Sermons.
INDELICACY. n. f. [in and delicacy.] Want of delicacy; want of elegant decency.
Your papers would be chargeable with worse than indelicacy, they would be immoral, did you treat detestable uncleanness as you rally an impertinent self-love. Addison.
INDELICATE. adj. [in and delicate.] Wanting decency; void of a quick sense of decency.
INDEMNIFICATION. n. f. [from indemnify.]

which may most fully remove all fears, and bury all jealousies in forgetfulness. King Charles.
TO INDENT. v. a. [in and dens, a tooth, Lat.] To mark any thing with inequalities like a row of teeth; to cut in and out; to make to wave or undulate.
About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlik'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakespeare's As you like,
The serpent then, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a furling maze! Milton's Paradise Lost.
Trent, who, like some earth-born giant, spreads
His thirty arms along the indented meads. Milton.
The margins on each side do not terminate in a freight line, but are indented. Woodward.
TO INDENT. v. n. [from the method of cutting counterparts of a contract together, that, laid on each other, they may fit, and any want of conformity may discover a fraud.] To contract; to bargain; to make a compact.
Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves? Shakespeare, H. IV.
He descends to the solemnity of a pact and covenant; and has indented with us. Darby of Piety.
INDENT. n. f. [from the verb.] Inequality; incisure; inden-tation.
Trent shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
INDENTATION. n. f. [in and dens, Latin.] An indenture;
waving in any figure.
The margins on each side do not terminate in a freight line, but are indented; each indentation being continued in a small ridge across the line, to the indentation that answers it on the opposite margin. Woodward on Poets.
INDENTURE. n. f. [from indent.] A covenant, so named because the counterparts are indented or cut one by the other.
In Hall's chronicle much good matter is quite marred with indenture English. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
The trick to his grief will find
How firmly these indentures bind. Swift.
INDEPENDENCE. n. f. [Independence, Fr. in and dependence.]
INDEPENDENCY. } Freedom; exemption from reliance or control; state over which none has power.
Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independency on matter. Addison's Spectator.
Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

As water is in water. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

She warbled in her throat,

And tun'd her voice to many a merry note;

But indistinct, and neither sweet nor clear. Dryden.

When we speak of the infinite divisibility of matter, we keep a very clear and distinct idea of division and divisibility; but when we come to parts too small for our senses, our ideas of these little bodies become obscure and indistinct. Watts.

IND

Know all the good that individuals find,
Lie in three words, health, peace and competence. Pope.
We see each circumstance of art and individual of nature summoned together by the extent and fecundity of his imagination. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

It would be wise in them, as individual and private mortals, to look back a little upon the forms they have raised, as well as those they have escaped. Swift.

The object of any particular idea is called an individual; so
Peter is an individual man, London an individual city. Watts.

2. Undivided; not to be parted or disjointed.
To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life, to have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual face dear. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Long eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss. Milton.
Under his great vicegerent reign abide United, as one individual soul,
For ever happy. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. v.

INDIVIDUALITY. n. f. [from individual.] Separate or distinct existence.
Crambe would tell his instructor, that all men were not singular; that individuality could hardly be predicated of any man; for it was commonly said that a man is not the same he was, and that mad men are beside themselves. Arbutnot.

INDIVIDUALLY. adv. [from individual.] With separate or distinct existence; numerically.
How should that subtilt solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it. Hooker.

I dare not pronounce him omniscious, that being an attribute individually proper to the godhead, and incommunicable to any created substance. Halewell on Providence.

To INDIVIDUATE. v. a. [from individuum, Latin.] To distinguish from others of the same species; to make single.
Life is individuated into infinite numbers, that have their distinct sense and pleasure. More against Atheism.

No man is capable of translating poetry, who, besides a genius to that art, is not a master both of his author's language and of his own; nor must we understand the language only of the poet, but his particular turn of thoughts and expression, which are the characters that distinguish and individuate him from all other writers. Dryden.

INDIVIDUATION. n. f. [from individuate.] That which makes an individual.
What is the principle of individuation? Or what is it that makes any one thing the same as it was before? Watts.

INDIVIDUITY. n. f. [from individuum, Latin.] The state of being an individual; separate existence.

INDIVISIBILITY. n. f. [from indivisibilis.] Want of divine power.
Not in use.
How openly did the oracle betray his indivinity unto Cræsus, who being ruined by his amphibology, and expostulating with him, received no higher answer than the excuse of his impotency. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INDIVISIBILITY. n. f. [from indivisibilis.] State in which no division can be made.
A pebble and mortar will as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acutest thought of a mathematician. Locke.

INDIVISIBLE. adj. [from indivisibilis, Fr. in and divisible.] What cannot be broken into parts; so small as that it cannot be smaller;
having reached the last degree of divisibility.
By atom, no body will imagine we intend to express a perfect indivisible, but only the least sort of natural bodies. Digby.

Here is but one indivisible point of time observed, but one action performed; yet the eye cannot comprehend at once the whole object. Dryden's Duffresney.

INDIVISIBLY. adv. [from indivisible.] So as it cannot be divided.
INDIVISIBLE. adj. [from indivisibilis.] Unreachable; insusceptible of instruction.

INDOCILE. adj. [from indocilis, Fr. indocile, Latin.] Unreachable; incapable of being instructed.

These certainly are the fools in the text, indocile, intratable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments, and is proof against demonstration itself. Bentley's Sermons.

INDOCILITY. n. f. [from indocilis, Fr. in and docilis.] Unreachabil-ity; refusal of instruction.

To INDOCTRINATE. v. a. [from indocetrare, old French.] To instruct; to tincture with any science, or opinion.
Under a master that discoursed excellently, and took much delight in indoctrinating his young inexperienced favourite, Buckingham had obtained a quick conception of speaking very gracefully and pertinently. Clarendon.

They that never peep beyond the common belief, in which their easy understandings were at first indoctrinated, are strongly assured of the truth and co-operative excellency of their receptions. Glauco, Scipio.

INDOCTRINATION. n. f. [from indoctrinare.] Instruction; information.

IND

Although postulates are very accommodable unto junior in-doctrinations, yet are these authorities but temporary, and not to be embraced beyond the minority of our intellectuals. Bra.

INDOLENCE. n. f. [from indolentia, Latin; indolence, French.]
1. Freedom from pain.

As there must be indolence where there is happiness, so there must not be indigence. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Laziness; inattention; listlessness.
Let Epicurus give indolence as an attribute to his gods, and place in it the happiness of the blest: the divinity which we worship has given us not only a precept against it, but his own example to the contrary. Dryden.

The Spanish nation, roused from their ancient indolence and ignorance, seem now to improve trade. Bolingbroke.

INDOLENT. adj. [French.]
1. Free from pain. Anyworth.

2. Careless; lazy; inattentive; listless.
Ill fits a chief
To waste long nights in indolent repose. Pope's Iliad.

INDOLENTLY. adv. [from indolent.]
1. With freedom from pain.

2. Carelessly; lazily; inattentively; listlessly.
While lull'd by sound, and undisturb'd by wit,
Calm and serene you indolently sit. Addison.

To INDOLW. v. a. [from indolere, Latin.] To portion; to enrich with gifts, whether of fortune or nature. See Endow.

INDRAUGHT. n. f. [from indraght.]
1. An opening in the land into which the sea flows.
Ebb and floods there could be none, when there was no in-draught, bays, or gulphs to receive a flood. Raleigh.

2. Inlet; passage inwards.
Navigable rivers are for many indraghts to attain wealth.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

To INDREINCH. v. a. [from indrench.] To soak; to drown.
My hopes lie drown'd; in many fathoms deep
They lie indrench'd. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

INDUBIOUS. adj. [from indubius.] Not doubtful; not suspecting; certain.
Hence appears the vulgar vanity of reposeing an indubious confidence in those antipathetical spirits. Harvey.

INDUBITABLE. adj. [from indubitabilis, Latin; indubitable, Fr. in and dubitable.] Undoubted; unquestionable.
When general observations are drawn from so many particulars as to become certain and indubitable, these are jewels of knowledge. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

INDUBITABLY. adv. [from indubitable.] Undoubtedly; unquestionably.
If we transport these proportions from audible to visible objects, there will indubitably result from either a graceful and harmonious contentment. Watson's Architecture.

The patriarchs were indubitably invested with both these authorities. Spratt's Sermons.

I appeal to all sober judges, whether our souls may be only a mere echo from clashing atoms; or rather indubitably must proceed from a spiritual substance. Bentley's Sermons.

INDUBITATE. adj. [from indubitatus, Latin.] Unquestioned; certain; apparent; evident.
If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the dishonour of the line of York, held then the in-dubitate heirs of the crown. Bacon's Henry VII.

I have been tempted to wonder how, among the jealousies of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitate heir of the Saxon line. Watson.

To INDUCE. v. a. [from inducere, Latin.]
1. To persuade; to influence to any thing.
The self-same argument in this kind, which doth but induce the vulgar sort to like, may constrain the wiser to yield. Hooker.

This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments both of nature and education, yet would she never be induced to entertain marriage with any. Hayward.

Desire which thee still longer to converse Induc'd me. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Let not the covetous design of growing rich induce you to ruin your reputation, but rather satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name. Dryden's Duffresney.

2. To produce by persuasion or influence.
Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we strive apace to exceed our pattern. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

As this belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, the evidence for inducing it must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. Forbes.

3. To offer by way of induction, or consequential reasoning.
They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people, and take up popular conceits. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

4. To inculcate; to enforce.
This induces a general change of opinion, concerning the person

IND

person or party like to be obeyed by the greatest or strongest part of the people. Temple.

5. To cause extrinsically; to produce.
Sour things induce a contraction in the nerves, placed in the mouth of the stomach, which is a great cause of appetite. Bacon.

Acidity, as it is not the natural state of the animal fluids, but induced by aliment, is to be cured by aliment with the contrary qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

6. To introduce; to bring into view.
To exprobrate their stupidity, he induceth the providence of flocks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not to proper. Brown.

The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first Iliad, where he discovers their humours, interests, and designs. Pope.

7. To bring on; to superinduce.
Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.

INDUCEMENT. n. f. [from induce.] Motive to any thing; that which allures or persuades to any thing.
The former inducement, do now much more prevail, when the very thing hath ministered farther reason. Hooker.

Many inducements, besides Scripture, may lead me to that, which if Scripture be against, they are of no value, yet otherwise are strongly effectual to persuade. Hooker.

That mov'd me to't,
Then mark th' inducement. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Higher degree of life; inducement strong
For us. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

My inducement hither,
Was not at present here to find my son. Milton's Agonist.

Instances occur of oppression, to which there appears no inducement from the circumstances of the actors. Rogers.

INDUCER. n. f. [from inducere.] A persuader; one that influences.
To INDUCER. v. a. [from inducere, Latin.]

1. To introduce; to bring in.
The ceremonies in the gathering were first induced by the Venetians. Sandys's Travels.

2. To put into actual possession of a benefice.
If a person thus instituted, though not inducted, takes a secondary benefice, it shall make the first void. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INDUCTION. n. f. [from inductio, Fr. induction, Latin.]
1. Introduction; entrance.
These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of propitious hope. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.

2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of revelations; therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts's Logic.

The inquiry by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon's Natural History.

Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration: conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.

Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general; and if no exception occur from phenomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton's Opt.

He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.

INDUCTIVE. adj. [from inductio.]
1. The act or state of taking possession of an ecclesiastical living.
1. Leading; persuasive. With.

2. A brutish vice,
Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. Capable to infer or produce.
Abatements may take away infallible conclusivity in these evidences of fact, yet they may be probable and inductive of credibility, though not of science. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To INDUCE. v. a. [from inducere, Latin.]
1. To inculcate.

One first matter all,
Induc'd with various forms. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. It seems sometimes to be, even by good writers, confounded with induce or induce, to furnish or enrich with any quality or excellence.

The angel, by whom God induced the waters of Bethesda with supernatural virtue, was not seen; yet the angel's presence was known by the waters. Hooker.

His powers, with dreadful strength induc'd,
She, with her fair hand, still'd into the nostrils of his friend. Chapman's Iliad.

To INDULGE. v. a. [from indulgo, Latin.]
1. To fondle; to favour; to gratify with concession; to foster.
The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,
Indulge his flesh, and fatten with his sleep. Dryden's Pers.

IND

A mother was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well. L. cke.

To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Atterbury.

2. To grant not of right, but favour.
Ancient privileges, indulged by former kings to their people, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

The virgin entering bright, indulge'd the day
To the brown cave, and brush'd the dreams away. Dryden.

This is what nature's want may well suffice;
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryden's Juvenal.

My friend, indulge one labour more,
And seek Atreides. Pope's Odyssey.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night! Dunciad.

To INDULGE. v. n. [A Latinism not in use.] To be favourable; to give indulgence. With.

He must, by indulging to any one sort of reprovable discourse himself, defeat all his endeavours against the rest.
Government of the Tongue.

INDULGENCE. n. f. [from indulgentia, Fr. indulgence, Latin.]
INDULGENCY. n. f. [from indulgentia, Latin.]
1. Fondness; fond kindness.

Restraint the will not brook;
And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,
She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milton's Parad. Lost.

The glories of our life,
Which yet like golden ore, unripe in beds,
Expect the warm indulgence of heaven. Dryden's Arthur.

2. Forbearance; tenderness; opposite to rigour.
They err, that through indulgence to others, or fondness to any in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing less.
Hammond on Fundamentals.

In known images of life, I guess
The labour greater, as th' indulgence less. Pope.

3. Favour granted.
If all these gracious indulgences are without any effect on us, we must perish in our own folly. Rogers.

4. Grant of the church of Rome, not defined by themselves.
Thou, that giv'st whored indulgences to sin,
I'll canvas thee. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton.

In purgatory, indulgences, and supererogation, the assertors seem to be unanimous in nothing but in reference to profit.
Decay of Piety.

Leo X. is deservedly infamous for his base prostitution of indulgences. Atterbury.

INDULGENT. adj. [from indulgentia, Fr. indulgent, Latin.]
1. Kind; gentle.
God has done all for us that the most indulgent Creator could do for the work of his hands. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Mild; favourable.
Hereafter such in thy behalf shall be
Th' indulgent censure of posterity. Waller.

3. Gratifying; favouring; giving way to. With of;
The feeble old, indulgent of their ease. Dryden's Zn.

INDULGENTLY. adv. [from indulgent.] Without severity;
without censure; without self-reproach; with indulgence.
He that not only commits some act of sin, but lives indulgently in it, is never to be counted a regenerate man. Hammond.

INDULT. n. f. [from indultus, Latin.] Privilege or exemption.
INDULTO. n. f. [from indultus, Latin.]

To INDURATE. v. n. [from indurare, Latin.] To grow hard; to harden.
Stones within the earth at first are but rude earth or clay; and so minerals come at first of juices concrete, which afterwards indurate. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

That plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiments in coral-line. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

1. To make hard.
A contracted indurated bladder is a circumstance sometimes attending on the stone, and indeed an extraordinary dangerous one. Sharp's Surgery.

2. To harden the mind; to fear the conscience.
INDURATION. n. f. [from indurare.]

1. The state of growing hard.
This is a notable instance of condensation and induration, by burial under earth, in caves, for a long time. Bacon.

2. The act of hardening.
3. Obduracy; hardness of heart.
Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.

INDUSTRIOUS. adj. [from industrius, Fr. industrious, Latin.] Diligent; laborious; assiduous. Opposed to sluggish.

INE

He himself, being excellently learned, and industrious to seek out the truth of all things concerning the original of his own people, hath set down the testimony of the ancients truly. Spenser on Ireland.

Let our just censures
Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
His thoughts were low:
To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful. Milton's Paradise Lost.
2. Designed; done for the purpose.
The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, draw the tendons of the third joints through. Moré's Divine Dialogues.
Observe carefully all the events which happen either by an occasional concurrence of various causes, or by the industrious application of knowing men. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.
INDUSTRIOUSLY. adv. [from industrious.] Locke.
1. Diligently; laboriously; assiduously.

If industriously
I play'd the fool, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Some friends to vice industriously defend
These innocent diversions, and pretend
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden's Jew.
2. For the set purpose; with design.
Great Britain was never before united in itself under one king, notwithstanding that the uniting had been industriously attempted both by war and peace. Bacon.
I am not under the necessity of declaring myself, and I industriously conceal my name, which wholly exempts me from any hopes and fears. Swift.
INDUSTRY. n. f. [industrialis, Fr. industria, Lat.] Diligence; assiduity.
The sweat of industry would dry and die.
But for the end it works to. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
See the laborious bee
For little drops of honey flee,
And there with humble tweets content her industry. Cowley.
Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our in- dustry, that we might not live like idle loiterers. Moré's Antid.
To INEBRIATE. v. a. [inebrio, Latin.] To intoxicate;
to make drunk.

Wine fugated inebriated less than wine pure: tops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriated more than wine of itself. Bac.
Fish, entering far in and meeting with the fresh water, as if inebriated, turn up their bellies and are taken. Sandy.
To INEBRIATE. v. n. To grow drunk; to be intoxicated.
At Constantinople fish, that come from the Euxine sea into the fresh water, do inebriate and turn up their bellies, so as you may take them with your hand. Bacon's Natural Hist.
INEBRIATION. n. f. [from inebriate.] Drunkenness; intoxication.

That cornelians and bloodstones may be of virtue to those intentions they are applied, experience will make us grant;
but not that an amethyst prevents inebriation. Brown.
INEFFABILITY. n. f. [from ineffable.] Unpeakableness.
INEFFABLE. adj. [ineffable, Fr. ineffabilis, Lat.] Unpeakable; unutterable; not to be expressed. It is used almost always in a good sense.

To whom the son, with calm aspect, and clear,
Lightning divine, ineffables serene
Made answer. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitted conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. South.
INEFFABLY. adv. [from ineffable.] In a manner not to be expressed.

He all his father full express'd,
Ineffably into his face receiv'd. Milton.
INEFFECTIVE. adj. [ineffectif, Fr. in and effectivus.] That which can produce no effect.

As the body, without blood, is a dead and lifeless trunk;
so is the word of God, without the spirit, a dead and ineffec- tive letter. Taylor.

He that assures himself he never errs, will always err; and his presumptions will render all attempts to inform him ineffec- tive. Glauco. Scyth.

INEFFECTUAL. adj. [in and effectual.] Unable to produce its proper effect; weak; without power.

The public reading of the Apocrypha they condemn as a thing effectual unto evil: the bare reading even of Scriptures themselves they milke, as a thing ineffectual to do good. Hask.

The death of Patroclus, joined to the offer of Agamem-non, which of itself had proved ineffectual. Pope.
INEFFECTUALNESS. n. f. [from ineffectual.] Inefficacy; want of power to perform the proper effect.

St. James speaks of the ineffectualness of some mens devotion, Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss. Wake.
INEFFICACIOUS. adj. [inefficax, Fr. inefficax, Latin.] Unable to produce effects; weak; feeble.

INE

Is not that better than always to have the rod in hand, and, by frequent use of it, misapply and render inefficacious this useful remedy? Locke.

INEFFICACY. n. f. [in and efficacia, Latin.] Want of power;
want of effect.

INELEGANCE. n. f. [from inelegant.] Absence of beauty;
INELEGANCY. n. f. [from inelegant.] Want of elegance.

INELEGANT. adj. [inelegans, Lat.]

1. Not becoming; not beautiful: opposite to elegant.
What order, so contriv'd as not to mix
Tastes, not well join'd, inelegant, but bring Taste after taste, upheld with kindest change. Milton.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, which is here reputed so inelegant and unbecoming, is indeed extremely charming and agreeable. Woodward.

2. Mean; depicable; contemptible.
Modern critics, having never read Homer, but in low and inelegant translations, impute the meanness of the translation to the poet. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

INELOQUENT. adj. [in and eloquens, Latin.] Not persuasive; not oratorical: opposite to eloquent.

INEPT. adj. [ineptus, Lat.] Unfit; useless; trifling; foolish.
The works of nature, being neither useless nor inept, must be guided by some principle of knowledge. Moré.

After their various unsuccessful ways,
Their fruitless labour, and inept essays,
No cause of these appearances they'll find,
But power exerted by th' Eternal Mind. Blackmore.

When the upper and vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile matter, such as was wholly inept and improper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

INEPTLY. adv. [ineptus, Latin.] Triflingly; foolishly; un-fitly.

None of them are made foolishly or ineptly. Moré.
All things were at first disposed by an omniscient intellect, that cannot contrive ineptly. Glauco. Scyth.

INEPTITUDE. n. f. [from ineptus, Lat.] Unfitness.
The grating and rubbing of axes against the sockets, wherein they are placed, will cause some ineptitude or resistancy to rotation of the cylinder. Willis.

An omnipotent agent works infallibly and infallibly, no ineptitude or stubbornness of the matter being ever able to hinder him. Ray on the Creation.

There is an ineptitude to motion from too great laxity, and an ineptitude to motion from too great tension. Arbutnot.

INEQUALITY. n. f. [inequalitè, Fr. from in and equalitas and in equalis, Latin.]

1. Difference of comparative quantity.
There is so great an inequality in the length of our legs and arms, as makes it impossible for us to walk on all four. Ray.

2. Unevenness; interchange of higher and lower parts.
The country is cut into so many hills and inequalities as renders it defensible. Addison on Italy.

The glass seemed as well wrought as the object-glasses use to be; yet when it was quicksilvered, the reflexion discovered innumerable inequalities all over the glass. Newton's Opt.

If there were no inequalities in the surface of the earth, nor in the seasons of the year, we should lose a considerable share of the vegetable kingdom. Bentley.

3. Disproportion to any office or purpose; state of not being adequate; inadequateness.

The great inequality of all things to the appetites of a rational soul appears from this, that in all worldly things a man finds not half the pleasure in the actual possession that he proposed in the expectation. South's Sermon.

4. Change of state; unlikeness of a thing to itself; difference of temper or quality.

In some places, by the nature of the earth, and by the situation of woods and hills, the air is more unequal than in others;
and inequality of air is ever an enemy to health. Bacon.

5. Difference of rank or station.
If so small inequality between man and man make in them modesty a commendable virtue, who respecting superiors as modesty can neither speak nor stand before them without superiors, can neither speak nor stand before them without fear. Hobbes.

INERRABILITY. n. f. [from inerrable.] Exemption from error;
infallibility.

I cannot allow their wisdom such a completeness and in- errability as to exclude myself from judging. King Charles.

INERRABLE. adj. [in and err.] Exempt from error.
We have conviction from reason, or decisions from the in- errable and requisite conditions of sense. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Infallibility and inerrableness is affirmed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Ham- mond.

INERRABLENESS. n. f. [from inerrable.] Exemption from error.

Infallibility and inerrableness is affirmed and inclosed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hammond on Fundamentals.

INERRABLY. adv. [from inerrable.] With security from error; infallibly.

INE

INERRINGLY. adv. [in and erring.] Without error; without mistake; without deviation.

That divers limners at a distance, without copy, should draw the same picture, is more conceivable, than that matter should frame itself so inerringly according to the idea of its kind. Glauco. Scyth.

INERT. adj. [inert, Lat.] Dull; sluggish; motionless.
Body alone, inert and brute, you'll find;
The cause of all things is by you assign'd. Blackmore.

Informers of the planetary train!
Without whose quickening glance their cumbrous orbs
Were true unlively mass, inert and dead. Thomson.

INERTLY. adv. [from inert.] Sluggishly; dully.

Ye powers,
Suspend a while your force inertly strong. Dunciad.

INERTATION. n. f. [in and ertia, Lat.] The act of baiting. Dist.
INERTIBLE. adj. [inertibilis, Fr. inertibilis, Lat.] Too valuable to be rated; transcending all price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl, Inestimable stones, unval'd jewels. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

The pope thereupon took advantage, abusing the simplicity of the king to suck out inestimable sums of money, to the intolerable grievance of both the clergy and temporality. Abbott.

There we shall see a sight worthy dying for, that blessed Saviour, of whom the Scripture does so excellently entertain us, and who does so highly deserve of us upon the score of his infinite perfections, and his inestimable benefits. Boyle.

And shall this prize, th' inestimable prize,
On that rapacious hand for ever blaze! Pope.

INEVIDENT. adj. [inevidens, Fr. in and evident.] Not plain; obscure. Not in use.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, and a stable assent unto things inevident, upon authority of the divine revealer. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

INEVITABILITY. n. f. [from inevitabilis.] Impossibility to be avoided; certainty.

By liberty, I do understand neither a liberty from sin, misery, servitude, nor violence, but from necessity, or rather necessitation; that is, an universal immunity from all inevita- bility and determination to one. Bramhall against Hobbs.

INEVITABLE. adj. [inevitabilis, Fr. inevitabilis, Lat.] Unavoidable; not to be escaped.

I had a palf with him: he gives me the fluck in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Fate inevitable
Subdues us. Milton.
Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailing pity show. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

INEVITABLY. adv. [from inevitable.] Without possibility of escape.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die. Milton's Par. Lost.
How inevitably does an immoderate laughter end in a sigh?
South's Sermons.

To look no further than the next line, it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point. Dryden.

Inflammations of the bowels oft inevitably tend to the ruin of the whole. Harvey on Consumptions.

If our sense of hearing were exalted, we should have no quiet or sleep in the silent nights, and we must inevitably be stricken deaf or dead with a clap of thunder. Bentley.

INEXCUSABLE. adj. [inexcusable, Fr. inexcusable, Lat. in and excusable.] Not to be excused; not to be palliated by apology.

It is a temerity, and a folly inexcusable, to deliver up ourselves needlessly into another's power. L'Estrange.

As we are an island with ports and navigable seas, we should be inexcusable if we did not make these blessings turn to account. Addison's Freeholder.

Such a favour could only render them more obdurate, and more inexcusable: it would inbase their guilt. Atterbury.

If learning be not encouraged under your administration, you are the most inexcusable person alive. Swift.

A fallen woman is the more inexcusable, as, from the cradle,
the sex is warned against the delusions of men. Clarissa.

INEXCUSABLENESS. n. f. [from inexcusable.] Enormity beyond forgiveness or palliation.

Their *inexcusable*ness is stated upon the supposition that they knew God, but did not glorify him. South's Sermons.

INEXCUSABLY. adv. [from inexcusable.] To a degree of guilt or folly beyond excuse.

It will inexcusably condemn some men, who having received excellent endowments, yet have frustrated the intention. Brown.

INEXHAUSTIBLE. adj. [in and exhaust.] That which cannot evaporate.

A new laid egg will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a great stock of humid part, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the inexhaustible parts into consistence. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

INEXHAUSTED. adj. [in and exhausted.] Unemptied; not possible to be emptied.

INE

So wert thou born into a tuneful strain,
An early, rich, and inexhausted vein. Dryden.

INEXHAUSTIBLE. adj. [in and exhaustibilis.] Not to be drawn all away; not to be spent.

Reflect on the variety of combinations which may be made with number, whose stock is inexhaustible, and truly infinite. Locke.

The stock that the mind has in its power, by varying the idea of space, is perfectly inexhaustible, and so it can multiply figures in infinitum. Locke.

INEXISTENT. adj. [in and existent.] Not having being; not to be found in nature.

To express complexed significations they took a liberty to compound and piece together creatures of allowable forms into mixtures inexistent. Brown's Vulg. Err.

We doubt whether these heterogeneities be so much as in- existent in the concrete, whence they are obtained. Boyle.

INEXISTENCE. n. f. [in and existence.] Want of being; want of existence.

He calls up the heroes of former ages from a state of in- existence to adorn and diversify his poem. Brown on the Odys.

INEXORABLE. adj. [inexorable, Fr. inexorable, Latin.] Not to be intreated; not to be moved by intreaty.

You are more inhuman, more inexorable, Shakespeare's HVI.
Oh ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

The scourge
Inexorable calls to penance. Milton.

And with the rest th' inexorable dame. Dryden.
Th' inexorable gates were barr'd,
And nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams, shrieks of woe. Pope's St. Cecilia.

We can be deaf to the words of so sweet a charmer, and in- exorable to all his invitations. Rogers.

INEXPEDIENCE. n. f. [in and expedient.] Want of fitness;
INEXPEDIENT. adj. [in and expedient.] Inconvenient; unfit;
improper; unsuitable to time or place.

It concerneth superiors to look well to the expediency and inexpedient of what they enjoy in different things. Sanderfon.

INEXPEDIENT. adj. [in and expedient.] Inconvenient; unfit;
improper; unsuitable to time or place.

It is not inexpedient they should be known to come from a person altogether a stranger to chymical affairs. Boyle.

We should be prepared not only with patience to bear, but to receive with thankfulness a repulse, if God should see them to be inexpedient. Smallidge's Sermons.

INEXPERIENCE. n. f. [inexperience, Fr. in and experience.] Want of experimental knowledge; want of experience.

Thy words at random argue thine inexperience. Milton.
Prejudice and self-sufficiency naturally proceed from inexpe- rience of the world, and ignorance of mankind. Addison.

INEXPERIENCED. adj. [inexpertus, Lat.] Not experienced.

INEXPERT. adj. [inexpertus, Lat. in and expert.] Unskilful; unkilled.

The race elect advance
Through the wild desert; not the readiest way,
Left entering on the Canaanite alarm'd,
War terrify them inexpert. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

In letters and in laws
Not inexpert. Prior.

INEXPIABLE. adj. [inexpiabile, French; inexpiabilis, Latin.]
1. Not to be atoned.

2. Not to be mollified by atonement.

Love seeks to have love:
To raise in me inexpiable hate? Milton's Agonistes.

INEXPIABLY. adv. [from inexpiabile.] To a degree beyond atonement.

Excursions are inexpiably bad,
And 'tis much sater to leave out than add. Roscommon.

INEXPLEABLY. adv. [in and expleo, Lat.] Infatiably. A word not in use.

What were these harpies but flatterers, delators, and the inexpleably covetous. Sandy's Travels.

INEXPLICABLE. adj. [inexplicable, Fr. in and explicare, Lat.] Incapable of being explained; not to be made intelligible.

What could such apprehensions breed, but, as their nature is, inexplicable passions of mind, desires abhorring what they embrace, and embracing what they abhor? Hobbes.

To me at least this seems inexplicable, if light be nothing else than preffion or motion propagated through ether. Newton.

None eludes sagacious reason more,
Than this obscure inexplicable pow'r. Blackmore.

INEXPLICABLY. adv. [from inexplicable.] In a manner not to be explained.

INEXPRESSIBLE. adj. [in and expressi.] Not to be told; not to be uttered; unutterable.

Thus when in orbs
Of circuit inexpressible they stood,
Orb within orb. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Nothing

INF

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of human nature, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy and secret inexpressible communications.

The true God had no certain name given to him; for Father, and God, and Creator, are but titles arising from his works; and God is not a name, but a notion ingrafted in human nature of an inexpressible being.

There is an inimitable grace in Virgil's words; and in them principally consists that beauty, which gives to inexpressible a pleasure to him who best understands their force: this diction of his is never to be copied.

INEXPRESSIBLY. adv. [from inexpressible.] To a degree or in a manner not to be uttered, unutterably.

God will protect and reward all his faithful servants in a manner and measure inexpressibly abundant.

He began to play upon it: the sound was exceeding sweet, and wrought into a variety of tunes that were inexpressibly melodious.

INEXPUGNABLE. adj. [inexpugnabile, Fr. inexpugnabilis, Lat.] Impregnable; not to be taken by assault; not to be subdued.

Why should there be implanted in each sex such a vehement and inexpugnable appetite of copulation? Ray on the Creation.

INEXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [inextinguibile, Fr. in and extinguis, Latin.] Unquenchable.

Pillars, statues, and other memorials, are a sort of shadow of an endless life, and show an inextinguishable desire which all men have of it.

INEXTRICABLE. adj. [inextricable, Fr. inextricabilis, Latin.] Not to be disentangled; not to be cleared; not to be set free from obscurity or perplexity.

He that should tie inextricable knots, only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not to have served his generation. Decay of Piety.

Stopt by awful heights, and gulphs immense
Of wisdom, and of vast omnipotence,
She trembling stands, and does in wonder gaze,
Lost in the wild inextricable maze.

INEXTRICABLY. adv. [from inextricable.] To a degree of perplexity not to be disentangled.

The mechanical atheist, though you grant him his laws of mechanism, is nevertheless inextricably puzzled and baffled with the first formation of animals.

INEXTINGUISHABLY. adv. [from inextinguishable.] To a degree of perpetuity not to be extinguished.

In vain they strive; th' intangling snares deny,
Inextricably firm, the power to fly.

To INYE. v. n. [in and eye.] To inoculate; to propagate trees by the infusion of a bud into a foreign stock.

Let age experience teach thee all the arts
Of grafting and inying.

INFALLIBILITY. n. f. [infallibilité, Fr. from infallible.] INFALLIBILITIES. n. f. [infallibilités, Fr. from infallible.] INFALLIBLY. adv. [infalliblement, Fr. from infallible.] INFALLIBLE. adj. [infallible, Fr. from infallible.] Privileged from error; incapable of mistake; not to be misled or deceived; certain.

Every cause admitteth not such infallible evidence of proof, as leaveth no possibility of doubt or scruple behind it. Hooker.

Believe my words;
For they are certain and infallible.
The success is certain and infallible, and none ever yet miscarried in the attempt.

INFALLIBLY. adv. [from infallible.]

1. Without danger of deceit; with security from error.
We cannot be as God infallibly knowing good and evil.

2. Certainly.
Our blessed Lord has distinctly opened the scene of futurity to us, and directed us to such a conduct as will infallibly render us happy in it.

To INFAMOUSLY. v. a. [infamare, Fr. infamare, Lat.] To represent to disadvantage; to defame; to censure publicly; to make infamous; to brand.

Livia is infamous for the poisoning of her husband. Bacon.

Hitherto obscur'd, infam'd,
And thy fair fruit let hang, as to no end Created.

INFAMOUS. adj. [infamé, infamant, Fr. infamis, Lat.] Publicly branded with guilt; openly censured; of bad nature.

Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee, which art infamous.

These are as some infamous bawd or whore
Should praise a matron; what could hurt her more. B. Jonson.

After times will dispute it, whether Hotham were more infamous at Hull or at Tower-hill.

Persons infamous, or branded with any note of infamy in any public court of judicature, are, ipso jure, forbidden to be advocates.

INFAMOUSLY. adv. [from infamous.]

1. With open reproach; with publick notoriety of reproach.

INF

2. Shamefully; scandalously.

That poem was infamously bad.

INFAMOUSNESS. n. f. [infamie, Fr. infamia, Lat.] Publick reproach; notoriety of bad character.

INFAMY. n. f. [infamia, Fr. infamia, Lat.] The state of being taken up in the lips of talkers, and are the infamy of the people.

I throw my infamy at thee:
I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster.

The noble idle doth want her proper limbs,
Her face deac'd with fears of infamy.
Willful perpetrations of unworthy actions brand, with most indelible characters of infamy, the name and memory to posterity.

INFANCY. n. f. [infantia, Latin.]

1. The first part of life. Usually extended by naturalists to seven years.

Dare we affirm it was ever his meaning, that unto their salvation, who even from their tender infancy never knew any other faith or religion than only Christian, no kind of teaching can be available, saving that which was to be useful for the first universal conversion of Gentiles, hating Christianity? Hooker.

Pirithous came t' attend
This worthy Theseus, his familiar friend:
Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man.

The insensible impressions on our tender infancies have very important and lasting consequences.

2. Civil infancy, extended by the English law to one and twenty years.

3. First age of any thing; beginning; original; commencement.

In Spain our springs, like old mens children, be Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

The difference between the riches of Roman citizens in the infancy and in the grandeur of Rome, will appear by comparing the first valuation of estates with the estates afterwards possessed.

INFANTICIDE, or hingsangtheft, or infangtheft, is compounded of three Saxon words: the preposition, in, fang, or fang, to take or catch, and theft. It signifies a privilege of liberty granted unto lords of certain manors to judge any thief taken within their fee.

INFANT. n. f. [infans, French; infans, Latin.]

1. A child from the birth to the end of the seventh year.

It being a part of their virtuous education, serveth greatly both to nourish in them the fear of God, and to put us in continual remembrance of that powerful grace, which openeth the mouths of infants to found his praise.

Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power.
There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not fill'd his days.

First the shrill found of a small rural pipe,
Was entertainment for the infant stage.

Young mothers wildly flare, with fear possess'd,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood.

2. [In law.] A young person to the age of one and twenty.

INFANTA. n. f. [Spanish.] A princess descended from the royal blood of Spain.

INFANTICIDE. n. f. [infanticide, Fr. infanticidium, Lat.] The slaughter of the infants by Herod.

INFANTILE. adj. [infantilis, Latin.] Pertaining to an infant.

The fly lies all the Winter in these balls in its infantile state, and comes not to its maturity 'till the following Spring.

INFANTRY. n. f. [infanterie, French.] The foot soldiers of an army.

The principal strength of an army consisteth in the infantry or foot; and to make good infantry it requieth men bred in some free and plentiful manner.

That small infantry,
Warr'd on by cranes.

INFARCTION. n. f. [in and farctio, Latin.] Stuffing; constitution.

An hypocondriack consumption is occasioned by an infarction and obstruction of the spleen.

To INFATUATE. v. a. [infatuare, from in and fatuus, Latin; infatuare, French.] To strike with folly; to deprive of understanding.

The judgment of God will be very visible in infatuating a people, as ripe and prepared for destruction, into folly and madness, making the weak to contribute to the designs of the wicked, and suffering even those, out of a confidence of their equity, to grow more wicked.

It is the reforming of the vices and sottishness that had long overpread the infatuated, gentle world; a prime branch of that design of Christ's sending his disciples.

INF

The people are so universally infatuated with the notion, that, if a cow falls sick, it is ten to one but an old woman is clapt up in prison for it.

The carriage of our atheisms or deisms is amazing: no dotage so infatuated, no pendency so extravagant as theirs.

May hypocrites
That slyly speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwearied, 'till, by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose.

INFATUATION. n. f. [from infatuate.] The act of striking with folly; deprivation of reason.

Where men give themselves over to the defence of wicked interests and false propositions, it is just with God to smite the greatest abilities with the greatest infatuations.

INFATUATING. n. f. [from infatuatus, Lat.] The act of making unlucky. An odd and inelegant word.

As the king did in some part remove the envy from himself, so he did not observe that he did withal bring a kind of malediction and infatuating upon the marriage, as an ill prognostick.

INFATIGABLE. adj. [in and fatigabile.] Impracticable.

This is so difficult and infatigable, that it may well drive modesty to despair of science.

To INFECT. v. a. [infectare, French; infectus, Latin.]

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to hurt by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

They put such words in the mouths of one of those fantastical mind infected people, that children and musicians call lovers.

Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.

The nature of bad news infects the teller.

Every day
It would infect his speech, that if the king
Should without illue die, he'd carry it so
To make the seepster his.

To their dear pillows will discharge their secrets.

She speaks pontards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north-star.

I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence.

The love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat,
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw.

2. To fill with something hurtfully contagious.

Infected be the air whereon they ride,
And damn'd all those that trust them!

INFECTION. n. f. [infectio, Fr. infectio, Latin.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison.

Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from disordered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occasion the same disorders as in the bodies they came from.

What a strange infection
Is fall'n into thy ear!

The blessed gods
Purge all infections from our air, whilst you
Do climate here.

Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self.

Left that th' infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee.

The transmutation or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infections, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal; but withal there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no smell at all.

INFECTIOUS. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee!
In a house,
Where the infectious pestilence did reign.

Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such as pestilences and lippitudes.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operation of some poisons, that are received only by the smell.

INFECTIOUSLY. adv. [from infectious.] Contagiously.

The will dotes, that is inclinable
To what infectiously itself affects.

INFECTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from infectious.] The quality of being infectious; contagiousness.

INF

INFECTIVE. adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of contagion.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power.

INFECUND. n. f. [infecundus, Latin.] Unfruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved.

INFECUNDITY. n. f. [infecunditas, Lat.] Want of fertility; barrenness.

INFELICITY. n. f. [infelicitas, Fr. infelicitas, Latin.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wife and happy.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea.

To INFER. v. a. [inferre, French; infero, Latin.]

1. To bring on; to induce.

Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition.

Yet what thou canst attain, which best may serve
To glorify the Maker, and infer
Thy hearing.

Great,
Or bright, infer not excellence: the earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glittering, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines.

One would wonder how, from so differing premises, they should all infer the same conclusion.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing publick esteem, by deriving well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations.

3. To offer; to produce.

Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator,
Infering arguments of mighty force.

INFERENCE. n. f. [inference, French, from infer.] Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument.

INFERRIBLE. adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferred from their premises.

INFERIORITY. n. f. [inferiorité, Fr. from inferior.] Lower state of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiority which is not possibly to be remedied.

INFERIORITY. adj. [inferior, Lat. inferior, French.]

1. Lower in place.

2. Lower in station or rank of life.

A great person gets more by obliging his inferior than by disdainning him.

3. Lower in value or excellency.

The love of liberty with life is giv'n,
And life itself th' inferior gift of heav'n.

I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferior to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of.

4. Subordinate.

General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferior and particular propositions.

INFERIORITY. n. f. [from the adjective.] One in a lower rank or station than another.

INFERNAL. adj. [infernal, French; infernus, Latin.] Hellish; tartarean.

His gigantic limbs, with large embrace,
Infold nine acres of infernal space.

INFERNAL STONE. n. f.

Infernal stone, or the lunar caustick, is prepared from an evaporated solution of silver, or from crystals of silver. It is a very powerful caustick, eating away the flesh and even the bones to which it is applied.

INFERTILE. adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; without fecundity; infecund.

Ignorance being of itself, like stiff clay, an infertile soil, when pride comes to scorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable.

INFERTILITY. n. f. [infertilité, Fr. from infertile.] Unfruitfulness; want of fertility.

The same distemper of the air that occasioned the plague, occasioned also the infertility or noxiousness of the soil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very small, or very unwholesome.

Infert. v. a. [infertus, Fr. infertus, Lat.] To harass; to disturb; to plague.

They ceased not, in the mean while, to strengthen that part which in heart they favoured, and to infest by all means, under colour of other quarrels, their greatest adversaries in this cause.

Although they were a people infested, and mightily hated of all others, yet was there nothing of force to work the ruin of their state, till the time beforementioned was expired.

Unto my feeble breast
Come gently, but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou dost infest,
And hearts of greatest heroes dost engage.

They were no mean, distressed, calamitous persons that fled to him for refuge; but of so great quality, as it was apparent that they came not thither to protect their own fortune, but to infest and invade his.

These, said the genius, are envy, avarice, superstition, love, with the like cares and passions that infest human life.

No disease infests mankind more terrible in its symptoms and effects.

Infestivity. n. f. [in and festivity.] Mournfulness; want of cheerfulness.

Infestred. adj. [in and festus.] Rankling; inveterate.

This cursed creature, mindful of that old
Infestred grudge, which his mother felt,
So soon as Clarion he did behold,

His heart with vengeful malice inly swelt.

Infestation. n. f. [in and festum, Lat.] The act of putting one in possession of a fee or estate.

 he was made by Keys to hurt the inoffensive. Pope.
 2. Incipient; not complete.
 Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and cures many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.
 The schools have used a middle term to express this affection, and have called it the initial fear of God. Rogers.
 To INITIATE. v. a. [initier, French; initio, Lat.] To enter; to instruct in the rudiments of an art; to place in a new state; to put into a new society.
 Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry. Mare's Antidote against Atheism.
 To initiate his pupil in any part of learning, an ordinary skill in the governor is enough. Locke on Education.
 He was initiated into half a dozen clubs before he was one and twenty. Spektator, N^o. 576.
 No sooner was a convert initiated, but, by an easy figure,
 he became a new man. Addison.
 To INITIATE. v. n. To do the first part; to perform the first rite.
 The king himself initiates to the pow'r,
 Scatters with quivering hand the sacred flour,
 And the stream sprinkles. Pope's Odyssey.
INITIATE. adj. [initis, Fr. initatus, Lat.] Unpractised.
 My frange and self-abuse
 Is the initiate fear; that wants hard use:
 We're yet but young. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
INITIATION. n. f. [initiation, Lat. from initiate.] The act of entering of a new comer into any art or state.
 The ground of initiating or entering men into Christian life, is more summarily comprised in the form of baptism, the ceremony of this initiation instituted by Christ. Hammond.

 Command; order; precept.
 The institution of God's law is described as being established by solemn injunction. Hooker, b. i.
 My duty cannot suffer
 T' obey in all your daughter's hard commands;
 Though the injunction be to bar my doors,
 And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you. Shakespeare.

INK

For, still they knew; and ought t' have still remember'd
 The high injunction, not to taste that fruit, Whoever tempted. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
 The ceremonies of the church are necessary as the injun- ctions of lawful authority, the practice of the primitive church, and the general rules of decency. South.
 2. [In law.] Injunction is an interlocutory decree out of the chancery, sometimes to give possession unto the plaintiff for want of appearance in the defendants, sometimes to the king's ordinary court, and sometimes to the court-christian, to stay proceeding. Cowell.
 To INJURE. v. a. [in jur, French; injuria, Lat.]
 1. To hurt unjustly; to mischief undefervedly; to wrong.
 They injure by chance in a crowd, and without a design;
 then hate always whom they have once injured. Tenple.
 Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;
 But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

 Left heat should injure us, his timely care Milton.
 Hath unbefought provided.
INJURER. n. f. [from injure, Lat.] He that hurts another unjustly; one who wrongs another.
 Ill deeds are well turn'd back upon their authors;
 And gainst an injurer, the revenge is just. Benj. Johnson.
 The upright judge will countenance right, and discountenance wrong, whoever be the injurer or the sufferer. Atterb.
INJURIOUS. adv. [from injure; injurius, Lat. injurius, Fr.]
 1. Unjust; invasive of another's rights.
 Till the injurious Roman did extort
 This tribute from us, we were free. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
Injurious strength would rapine still excuse,
 By off'ring terms the weaker must refuse. Dryden.
 2. Guilty of wrong or injury.
 Yet beauty, though injurious, hath strange power,
 After offence returning, to regain
 Love once possess'd. Milton's Agonist. l. 1003.
 3. Mischievous; unjustly hurtful.
 Our repentance is not real, because we have not done what we can to undo our fault, or at least to hinder the injurious consequences of it from proceeding. Tillotson's Sermons.
 4. Detractory; contemptuous; reproachful; wrongful.
 A prison, indeed injurious, because a prison, but else well testifying affection, because in all respects as commodious as a prison can be. Sidney, b. ii.
 It is natural for a man, by directing his prayers to an image, to suppose the being he prays to represented by that image; which how injurious, how contemptuous must it be to the glorious nature of God? South's Sermons.
 If injurious appellations were of any advantage to a cause, what appellations would those deserve who thus endeavour to sow the seeds of sedition. Swift.
INJURIOUSLY. adv. [from injurious.] Wrongfully; hurtfully with injustice.
 Nor ought he to neglect the vindication of his character, when it is injuriously attacked. Pope and Gay.
INJURIOUSNESS. n. f. [from injurious.] Quality of being injurious.
 Some miscarriages might escape, rather through sudden necessities of state than any propensity either to injuriousness or oppression. King Charles.
INJURY. n. f. [in jur, Lat. injuria, Fr.]
 1. Hurt without justice.
 The town of Bouline, and other places, were acquired by just title of victory; and therefore in keeping of them no in- jury was offered. Hayward.

 Great injuries such vermin as mice and rats do in the fields.
 Mortimer.
 4. Contumelious language; reproachful appellation.
 Casting off the respects fit to be continued between great kings, he fell to bitter invectives against the French king; and, by how much he was the less able to do, talking so much the more, spake all the injuries he could devise of Charles. Bacon.
INJUSTICE. n. f. [in just, French; injustitia, Lat.] Iniquity; wrong.
 Cunning men can be guilty of a thousand injustices without being discovered, or at least without being punished. Swift.
INK. n. f. [in ker, French; inchiostro, Italian.] The black liquor with which men write.
 Mourn boldly my ink; for while she looks upon you, your blackness will shine. Sidney, b. ii.
 O! she's fallen
 Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea
 Hath drops too few to wash her clean again. Shakespeare.
 Write, my queen,
 And with mine eyes I'll drink the works you send,
 Though ink be made of gall. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
 Like madmen they huff'd stones and ink, Benj. Johnson.
 Intending

INL

Intending to have try'd
The silver favour which you gave,
In ink the shining point I dy'd,
And drench'd it in the fable wave.
Vitriol is the active or chief ingredient in ink, and no other falt will strike the colour with galls. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
I have found pens blacked almost all over when I had a while carried them about me in a silver ink case. Boyle.
The secretary poured the ink box all over the writings, and so defaced them. Havel's Vocal Forest.
He that would live clear of envy must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink pot. L'Estrange.
I could hardly refrain them from throwing the ink bottle at one another's heads. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

She through the porch and inlet of each sense Dropt in ambrosial oils till the reviv'd. Milton.
I desire any one to assign any simple idea, which is not received from one of these inlets. Locke.
A fine bargain indeed, to part with all our contrivances ports, which the greater the inlet is are so much the better, for the imaginary pleasure of a streight shore. Bentley.
Inlets amongst broken lands and islands, rocks and shoals.
Ellis's Voyage.
INLY. adj. [from in.] Interior; internal; secret.
Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou wouldst it as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words. Shakef.
INLY. adv. Internally; within; secretly; in the heart.
Her heart with joy uncontent inly swell'd,
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld. Fa. Qu.
I've inly wept,
Or should have spoke ere this. Shakepeare's Temp.
Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midst with a stone,
That beat out life. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
The stubborn only to destroy
These growing thoughts, my mother soon perceiving
By words at times cast forth, inly rejoic'd,
And said to me apart. Milton's Par. Reg. b. i.

jointly with another man, though in several rooms of his manfion-house, passing in and out by one door. Cowell.
So spake the enemy of mankind, inclos'd
In serpent, inmate bad! and toward Eve
Address'd his way. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown,
Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth, as inmate guests Too numerous. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife:
If thence we fly, the cause admits no doubt,
None but an inmate foe could force us out. Dryden's Aur.
INMOST. adj. [from in.] Deepest within; remotest from the surface.
'Tis you must dig with mattock and with spade,
And pierce the inmost centre of the earth. Shakepeare.
Rising fights and falling tears
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my inmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away. Addison on Italy.
Comparing the quantity of light reflected from the several rings, I found that it was most copious from the first or inmost, and in the exterior rings became less and less. Newton.
He sends a dreadful groan: the rocks around
Through all their inmost hollow caves resound. Pope.
I got into the inmost court, and I applied my face to the windows. Gulliver's Travels.
INN. n. f. [inn, Saxon, a chamber.] A house of entertainment for travellers.
How all this is but a fair inn,
Of fairer guests which dwell within. Sidney, b. ii.
Palmer,

INN

Palmer, quoth he, death is an equal doorn
To good and bad, the common inn of rest;
But, after death, the trial is to come.
When best shall be to them that lived best. Fairy Queen.
Now day is spent,
Therefore with me ye may take up your inn. Fairy Queen.
The West, that glimmers with some streaks of day,
Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn. Shakepeare's Macbeth.
That very hour, and in the self-same inn,
A poor mean woman was delivered. Shakepeare.
Like pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end. Dryden.
One may learn more here in one day, than in a year's rambling from one inn to another. Lo ke.
2. A house where students were boarded and taught: whence we keeper. Taylor's Rule of holy living.

A factious innkeeper, in the reign of Henry VII. was hanged, drawn, and quartered. Addison's Freeholder.
We were not so inquisitive about the inn as the innkeeper; and provided our landlord's principles were found, did not take any notice of the falateness of his provisions. Addison.
INNOCENCE. n. f. [innocentia, French; innocentia, Latin.]
1. Purity from injurious action; untainted integrity.
Simplicity and spotless innocence. Milton.
What comfort does overflow the devout soul, from a conscience of its own innocence and integrity. Tillotson.
2. Freedom from guilt imputed.
It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whitest part black. Shakef. Henry VIII.
If truth and upright innocence fail me,
I'll to the King my master. Shakef. H. IV.
3. Harmlessness; innoxiousness.
The air was calm and serene; none of those tumultuary motions and conflicts of vapours, which the mountains and the winds cause in ours: 'twas suited to a golden age, and to the first innocence of nature. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

INN

4. Simplicity of heart, perhaps with some degree of weakness.
I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence. Shakepeare.

Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;
The man is innocent. Shakef. Ant. and Cleopatra.
The peasant, innocent of all these ills,
With crooked ploughs the fertile fallows tills,
And the round year with daily labour fills. Dryden.
3. Unharmful; harmless in effects.
The spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.
INNOCENT. n. f.
1. One free from guilt or harm.
So pure an innocent as that same lamb. Fairy Queen.
Thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,
That e'er did lift up eye. Shakef. Othello.
If murth'ring innocents be executing,
Why, then thou art an executioner. Shakef. Henry VI.
2. A natural; an idiot.
Innocents are excluded by natural defects. Hooker.
INNOCENTLY. adv. [from innocent.]
1. Without guilt.
The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others finely and difficultly. South's Sermons.
2. With simplicity; with fineness or imprudence.
3. Without hurt.
Balls at his feet fell innocently dead. Cowley.
INNOCUOUS. adj. [innocuus, Latin.] Harmless in effects.
The most dangerous poisons, skilfully managed, may be made not only innocuous, but of all other medicines the most effectual. Grew's Colloq.
INNOCUOUSLY. adv. [from innocuus.] Without mischievous effects.
Whether quails, from any peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellbore, or rather sometimes but medically use the same. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
INNOCUOUSNESS. n. f. [from innocuus.] Harmlessness.
The blow which shakes a wall, or beats it down, and kills men, hath a greater effect than that which penetrates into a mud wall, and doth little harm; for that innocuousness of the effect makes, that, although in itself it be as great as the other, yet 'tis little observed. Digby on Bodies.
To INNOVATE. v. a. [innovare, French; innovo, Latin.]
1. To bring in something not known before.
Time indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees. Bacon.
Men pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon, and care not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniences. Bacon.
Former things
Are set aside like abdicated kings;
And every moment alters what is done.
And innovates some act 'till then unknown. Dryden.
Every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry;
every man therefore is not fit to innovate. Dryden.
2. To change by introducing novelties.
From his attempts upon the civil power he proceeds to innovate God's worship. South's Sermons.
INNOVATION. n. f. [innovation, French, from innovare.] Change by the introduction of novelty.
The love of things ancient doth argue stay'dness; but levity and want of experience maketh apt unto innovations. Hooker.
It were good that men in innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees. Bacon's Essays.
Great changes may be made in a government, yet the form continue; but large intervals of time must pass between every such innovation, enough to make it of a piece with the constitution. Swift.
INNOVATOR. n. f. [innovateur, French, from innovare.]
1. An introducer of novelties.
I attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to th' publick weal. Shakef. Coriolanus.
Every medicine is an innovation; and he that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator: and if time of course alter things to the worse, and wisdom and counsel shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end? Bacon's Essays.
2. One that makes changes by introducing novelties.
He counsels him to detest and persecute all innovators of divine worship. South's Sermons.
INNOXIOUS.

INO

INNOXIOUS. adj. [innoxius, Latin.]

1. Free from mischievous effects.

Innoxious flames are often seen on the hair of mens heads and horses manes. Digby.
We may safely use purgatives, they being benign, and of innocuous qualities. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Sent by the better genius of the night,
Innoxious gleaming on the horse's mane,
The meteor fits. Thomson's Autumn.

2. Pure from crimes.

Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innoxious through his age. Pope.

INNOXIOUSLY. adv. [from innoxius.] Harmlessly.
Animals, that can innoxiously digest these poisons, become antidotal to the poison digested. Brown's Vulgar Err.

INNOXIOUSNESS. n. f. [from innoxius.] Harmlessness.
INNUEENDO. n. f. [innuendo, from innuo, Latin.] An oblique hint.

As if the commandments, that require obedience and forbidd murder, were to be indicted for a libellous innuendo upon all the great men that come to be concerned. L'Estrange.
Mercury, though employed on a quite contrary errand, owns it a marriage by an innuendo. Dryden.

Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints that Stella is no chicken;
Your innuendoes, when you tell us,
That Stella loves to talk with fellows. Swift.

INNUMERABLE. adj. [innumerable, Fr. innumerable, Lat.] Not to be counted for multitude.

You have sent innumerable substance
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Cover me, ye pines,
Ye cedars! with innumerable boughs
Hide me where I may never see them more. Milton.

In lines, which appear of an equal length, one may be longer than the other by innumerable parts. Locke.

INNUMERABLY. adv. [from innumerable.] Without number.

INNUMEROUS. adj. [innumerus, Latin.] Too many to be counted.

'Twould be some solace yet, some little cheating,
In this close dungeon of innumerable boughs. Milton.

I take the wood,
And in thick shelter of innum'rous boughs,
Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows. Pope's Odyssey.

To INOCULATE. v. a. [inoculo, in and oculo, Latin.]

1. To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Nor are the ways alike in all
How to ingraft, how to inoculate. May's Virg. Georg.

Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month. Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the state,
To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate. Dryden.

2. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Thy stock is too much out of date,
For tender plants 't inoculate. Cleveland.

Where lilies, in a lovely brown,
Inoculate carnation. Cleveland.

INOCULATION. n. f. [inoculatio, Lat. from inoculare.]

1. Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone-fruit, and upon oranges and jasmynes. In order to perform it, be provided with a sharp pen-knife, having a flat haft, and some found bals-mat. Having taken off the cuttings from the trees you would propagate, chuse a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make an horizontal cut cross the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it.

This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing: then raising the bark of the stock with the flat haft of your pen-knife clear to the wood, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock, cutting off any part of the rind belonging to the bud which may be too long; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round with bals-mat, beginning at the under part of the slit, and so proceed to the top, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud.

The March following cut off the stock three inches above the bud, sloping it, that the wet may pass off: to this part of the stock, above the bud, fasten the shoot which proceeds from the bud, and which would be in danger of being blown out; but this must continue no longer than one year, after which it must be cut off close above the bud, that the stock may be covered thereby. Miler.

INOPPORTUNE. adj. [inopportunus, Latin.] Unseasonable; inconvenient.

INORDINACY. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; disorder.

It is safer to use inordination.

They become very sinful by the excess, which were not so in their nature: that inordinacy sets them in opposition to God's designation. Government of the Tongue.

INORDINATE. adj. [in and ordinatus, Latin.] Irregular; disorderly; deviating from right.

These people at first were wisely brought to acknowledge allegiance to the kings of England; but being straight left unto their own inordinate life, they forgot what before they were taught. Spenser on Ireland.

Thence raise
At last distemper'd, discontented thoughts;
Vain hopes, vain arms, inordinate desires. Milton.

Blown up with high conceits engend'ring pride.
From inordinate love and vain fear comes all unquietness of spirit. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

INORDINATELY. adv. [from inordinate.] Irregularly; not rightly.

As soon as a man desires any thing inordinately, he is presently disquieted in himself. Taylor.

INORDINATENESS. n. f. [from inordinate.] Want of regularity; intemperance of any kind.

INORDINATION. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; deviation from right.

Schoolmen and casuists, having too much philosophy to clear a lye from that intrinsic inordination and deviation from right reason, inherent in the nature of it, held that a lye was absolutely and universally sinful. South's Sermons.

INORGANICAL. adj. [in and organical.] Void of organs or instrumental parts.

We come to the lowest and the most inorganic parts of matter. Locke.

This fifth conjugation of nerves is branched to the ball of the eye, and to the precordia also in some measure, by insculating with one of its nerves. Derham's Physico-Theology.

INQUEST. n. f. [inquestus, French; inquisitio, Latin.]

1. Judicial enquiry or examination.

What confusion of face shall we be under, when that grand inquest begins; when an account of our opportunities of doing good, and a particular of our use or misuse of them is given?

Atterbury's Sermons.

2. [In law.] The inquest of jurors, or by jury, is the most usual trial of all causes, both civil and criminal, in our realm; for in civil causes, after proof is made on either side, so much as each part thinks good for himself, if the doubt be in the fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, impanelled by the sheriff for the purpose, and as they bring in their verdict so judgment passes: for the judge saith, the jury finds the fact thus; then is the law thus, and so we judge. For the inquest in criminal causes, see JURY.

3. Enquiry; search; study.

This is the laborious and vexatious inquest that the soul must make after science. South's Sermons.

INQUIETUDE. n. f. [inquiétude, Fr. inquietudo, inquietus, Lat.] Disturbed state; want of quiet; attack on the quiet.

Having had such experience of his fidelity and observance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him at home from any farther inquietude. Watson.

Iron, that has stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude and discontentment 'till it attain the former position.

The youthful hero, with returning light,
Rose anxious from th' inquietudes of night. Pope's Odyssey.

To INQUINATE. v. a. [inquinare, Latin.] To pollute; to corrupt.

An old opinion it was, that the his feeding upon serpents, that venomous food so inquinates their oval conceptions, that they sometimes came forth in serpentine shapes. Brown.

INQUINATION. n. f. [inquinatio, Lat. from inquinare.] Corruption; pollution.

Their causes and axioms are so full of imagination, and so infected with the old received theories, as they are mere inquinations of experience, and concoct it not. Bacon.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called by some of the ancients inquinatio, or incoaction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

INQUIRABLE. adj. [from inquire.] That of which inquiry or inquest may be made.

To INQUIRE. v. n. [inquire, French; inquire, Latin.]

1. To ask questions; to make search; to exert curiosity on any occasion.

You have oft inquired
After the shepherd that complain'd of love. Shakespeare.

We will call the damsel, and inquire at her mouth. Gen.

They began to inquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing. Lu. xxii. 23.

Inquire for one Saul of Tarsus. Acts ix. 11.

You sent Hadoram to king David, to inquire of his welfare. Chron. xviii. 10.

It is a subject of a very noble inquiry, to inquire of the more subtle perceptions; for it is another key to open nature, as well as the house. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

It may deserve our best skill to inquire into those rules, by which we may guide our judgment. South's Sermons.

The step-dame poison for the son prepares;
The son inquires into his father's years. Dryden.

Under their grateful shade Aeneas sat;
His left young Pallas kept, fix'd to his side,
And oft of winds inquired, and of the tide. Dryd. Æn.

They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under a guide that will mislead them, than he that is likelier to be prevailed on to inquire after the right way. Locke.

To those who inquired about me, my lover would answer, that I was an old dependent upon his family. Swift.

2. To make examination.

Awful Rhadamanthus rules the state;
He hears and judges each committed crime,
Enquires into the manner, place, and time. Dryden's Æn.

To INQUIRE. v. a.

1. To ask about; to seek out; as, he inquired the way.

2. To call; to name. Obsolete.

Canute had his portion from the rest,
The which he call'd Canutium, for his hire,
Now Canutium, which Kent we commonly inquire. F. Du.

INQUIRER. n. f. [from inquire.]

1. Searcher; examiner; one curious and inquisitive.

What satisfaction may be obtained from those violent disputers, and eager inquirers in what day of the month the world began?

What's good doth open to th' inquirers Rand,
And itself offers to th' accepting hand. Denham.

Superficial inquirers may satisfy themselves that the parts of matter are united by muscles, nerves, and other like ligaments.

This is a question only of inquirers, not disputers, who neither affirm nor deny, but examine. Locke.

INQUIRY. n. f. [from inquire.]

1. Interrogation; search by question.

The men which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate. Acts x. 17.

2. Examination; search.

This exactness is absolutely necessary in inquiries after philosophical knowledge, and in controversies about truth. Locke.

As to the inquiry about liberty, I think the question is not proper, whether the will be free, but whether a man be free. Locke.

I have been engaged in physical inquiries. Locke.

It is a real inquiry, concerning the nature of a bird, or a bat, to make their yet imperfect ideas of it more complete. Locke.

Judgment or opinion, in a remoter sense, may be called invention: as when a judge or a physician makes an exact inquiry into any cause. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

INQUISITION. n. f. [inquisition, Fr. inquisitio, Latin.]

1. Judicial inquiry.

When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them: he forgetteth not the cry of the humble. Pf. ix. 12.

We were willing to make a pattern or precedent of an exact inquisition. Bacon's Natural History.

With much severity, and strict inquisition, were punished the adherents and aiders of the late rebels. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Though it may be impossible to recollect every failing, yet you are so far to exercise an inquisition upon yourself, as, by observing lesser particulars, you may the better discover what the corruption of your nature sways you to. Taylor.

By your good leave,
These men will be your judges: we must stand
The inquisition of their rally
On our condition. Southern.

2. Examination; discussion.

When inquisition was made of the matter, it was found out. 2 Efb. xxiii.

3. [In law.] A manner of proceeding in matters criminal, by the office of the judge. Cowell.

4. The court established in some countries subject to the pope for the detection of heresy.

</

INQUISITOR. n. f. [inquisitor, Latin; inquisiteur, French.]

1. One who examines judicially.
In these particulars I have played myself the inquisitor, and find nothing contrary to religion or manners, but rather medicinal.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lives and crimes with his assessor hears. Dryden.

2. An officer in the popish courts of inquisition.

To INRAIL. v. a. [in and rail.] To inclose with rails.

In things indifferent, what the whole church doth think convenient for the whole, the same if any part do wilfully violate, it may be reformed and inrailed again, by that general authority whereunto each particular is subject. Hooker.

Where fam'd St. Giles's ancient limits spread,
An inrailed column rears its lofty head;

Here to sev'n streets sev'n dials count the day,
And from each other catch the circling ray. Gay.

INROAD. n. f. [in and road.] Incurion; sudden and desultory invasion.

Many hot inroads
They make in Italy. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

From Scotland we have had in former times some alarms,
And inroads into the northern parts of this kingdom. Bacon.

By proof we feel
Our pow'r sufficient to disturb his heav'n,

And with perpetual inroads to alarm,
Though inaccessible his fatal throne. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The loss of Shrewsbury expos'd all North Wales to the daily inroads of the enemy. Clarendon.

The country open lay without defence;
For poets frequent inroads there had made. Dryden.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insaurabilis, Latin.] Incurable; irremediable.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insaurabilis, Latin.] Mad; making mad.

Were such things here as we do speak about?
Or have we eaten of the insane root?

That takes the reason prisoner? Shaksp. Macbeth.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insatiabilis, Latin; insatiable, French.]

Greedy beyond measure; greedy to as not to be satisfied.

INSAURABLE. n. f. [from insatiabilis.] Greediness not to be appeased.

Some mens hydropick insatiableness had learned to thirst
The more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

INSAURABLE. adv. [from insatiabilis.] With greediness not to be appeased.

They were extremely ambitious, and insatiably covetous;
and therefore no impression, from argument or miracles, could reach them. South.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insatiatus, Latin.] Greedy to as not to be satisfied.

When my mother went with child
Of that insatiate Edward, noble York,

My princely father, then had wars in France. Shak. R. III.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insatiatus, Latin.] Greedy to as not to be satisfied.

Of that insatiate Edward, noble York,
My princely father, then had wars in France. Shak. R. III.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insatiatus, Latin.] Greedy to as not to be satisfied.

Vain war with heav'n.
Too oft has pride,

And hellish discord, and insatiate thirst
Of others rights, our quiet dispos'd. Phillips.

INSAURABLE. n. f. [in and satisfaction.] Want; unsatisfied state.

It is a profound contemplation in nature, to consider of the emptiness or insatisfaction of several bodies, and of their appetite to take in others. Bacon's Natural History.

INSAURABLE. adj. [insaturabilis, Lat.] Not to be glutted; not to be filled.

To INSCRIBE. v. a. [inscribo, Latin; inscrire, French.]

1. To write on any thing. It is generally applied to something written on a monument, or on the outside of something.

In all you write to Rome, or else
To foreign princes, ego & rex meus

Was still inscribed. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

Connatural principles are in themselves highly reasonable, and deducible by a strong process of ratiocination to be most true;

and consequently the high exercise of ratiocination might evince their truth, though there were no such originally inscribed in the mind. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Ye weeping loves! the stream with myrtles hide,
And with your golden darts, now useless grown,

Inscribe a verse on this relenting stone. Pope.

2. To mark any thing with writing: as, I inscribed the stone with my name.

3. To assign to a patron without a formal dedication.
One ode, which pleased me in the readings, I have attempted to translate in Pindarick verse: 'tis that which is inscribed to the present earl of Rochester. Dryden.

4. To draw a figure within another.

In the circle inscribe a square. Notes to Creech's Manilius.

INSCRIPTION. n. f. [inscriptio, Fr. inscriptio, Latin.]

1. Something written or engraved.

This avow'd of praise in time to come,
Those long inscriptions crowded on the tomb. Dryden.

2. Title.

Joubertus by the same title led our expectation, whereby we reaped no advantage, it answering scarce at all the promise of the inscription. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. [In law.] Is an obligation made in writing, whereby the accuser binds himself to undergo the same punishment, if he shall not prove the crime which he objects to the party accused in his accusatory libel, as the defendant himself ought to suffer, if the same be proved. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. Confinement of a book to a patron without a formal dedication.

INSCRUTABLE. adj. [inscrutabilis, Lat. inscrutable, Fr.] Unsearchable; not to be traced out by inquiry or study.

A jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a weather-cock on a steeple. Shak. Two Gent. of Verona.

This king had a large heart, inscrutable for good, and was wholly bent to make his kingdom and people happy. Bacon.

O how inscrutable! his equity
Twins with his power.

Hereunto they have recour'd as unto the oracle of life, the great determinator of virginity, conception, fertility, and the inscrutable infirmities of the whole body. Brown's Vulg. Err.

We should contemplate reverently the works of nature and grace, the inscrutable ways of providence, and all the wonderful methods of God's dealing with men. Atterbury.

To INSCULP. v. a. [insculpo, Latin.] To engrave; to cut.

A coin that bears the figure of an angel
Stamp'd in gold, but that insculps upon. Shaksp. Lear.

INSCULPTURE. n. f. [from in and sculpture.] Any thing engraved.

Timon is dead,
Entomb'd upon the very hem o' th' sea;

And on the grave-stone this insculpture, which
With wax I brought away. Shaksp. Timon.

It was usual to wear rings on either hand; but when precious gems and rich insculptures were added, the custom of wearing them was translated unto the left. Bacon.

To INSEAM. v. a. [in and seam.] To impress or mark by a seam or cicatrix.

Deep o'er his knee inseam'd remain'd the scar. Pope.

INSECT. n. f. [insecta, Latin.]

1. Insects may be considered together as one great tribe of animals:
they are called insects from a separation in the middle of their bodies, whereby they are cut into two parts, which are joined together by a small ligature, as we see in wasps and common flies. Locke.

Beast, bird, insect, or worm, durst enter none. Milton.

2. Any thing small or contemptible.

In ancient times the sacred plough employ'd
The kings, and awful fathers of mankind;

And some with whom compar'd, your insect tribes
Are but the beings of a Summer's day. Thomson's Spring.

Have held the scale of empire. Ditt.

INSECTATOR. n. f. [from insector, Latin.] One that persecutes or harasses with pursuit.

INSECTILE. adj. [from insect.] Having the nature of insects.

Insectile animals, for want of blood, run all out into legs. Bac.

INSECTOLOGER. n. f. [insect and logy.] One who studies or describes insects.

The insect itself is, according to modern insectologists, of the ichneumon-fly kind. Derham's Physico-Theology.

INSECURE. adj. [in and secure.]

1. Not secure; not confident of safety.

He is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment of his life, and is continually insecure not only of the good things of this life, but even of life itself. Filasson's Sermon.

2. Not safe.

INSECURITY. n. f. [in and security.]

1. Uncertainty; want of reasonable confidence.

It may be easily perceived with what insecurity of truth we ascribe effects, depending upon the natural period of time, unto arbitrary calculations, and such as vary at pleasure. Brown.

2. Want of safety; danger; hazard.

The unreasonableness and presumption, the danger and desperate insecurity of those that have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as attrition and contri-tion, sorrow, and reformation of amendment. Hammond.

INSEMINATION. n. f. [insemination, Fr. inseminatio, Lat.] The act of scattering seed on ground.

INSECUTION. n. f. [insecutio, Fr. insecutio, Lat.] Pursuit. Not in use.

Not the king's own horse got more before the wheel
Of his rich chariot, that might fill the insecution feet,
With the extreme hairs of his tail. Chapman's Iliad.

INSEPARABLE. adj. [inseparabile, French; inseparabile, Italian.]

Wanting thought; wanting sensibility.

Ye be reprobrates; obdurate inseparable creatures. Hammond.

So fond are mortal men,
As their own ruin on themselves t' invite,

Inseparable left, or to fence reprobate,
And with blindness internal struck. Milton's Agonist.

INSENSIBILITY. n. f. [insensibilitas, French; insensibilis, Latin.]

1. Inability to perceive.

Insensibility of slow motions may be thus accounted for:
motion cannot be perceived without perception of the parts of space which it left, and those which it next acquires. Glanv.

2. Stupidity; dulness of mental perception.

3. Torpor; dulness of corporal sense.

INSENSIBLE. adj. [insensibilis, French.]

1. Imperceptible; not discoverable by the senses.

What is honour? a word. What is that word honour?
Air; a trim reckoning. Who hath it? he that died a Wednesday. Doth he feel it? no. Doth he hear it? no. Is it insensible then? yes, to the dead; but will it not live with the living? no. Why? detraction will not suffer it. Shaksp.

Two small and almost insensible pricks were found upon Cleopatra's arm.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible. Newton's Opt.

2. Slowly gradual.

They fall away,
And languish with insensible decay. Dryden.

3. Void of feeling either mental or corporal.

I thought
I then was passing to my former state

Insensible, and forthwith to dissolve. Milton.

4. Void of emotion or affection.

You grow insensible to the convenience of riches, the delights of honour and praise. Temple.

You render mankind insensible to their beauties, and have destroyed the empire of love. Dryden.

INSENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from insensible.] Absence of perception; inability to perceive.

The insensibleness of the pain proceeds rather from the re-

INSENSIBLY. adv. [from insensible.]

1. Imperceptibly; in such a manner as is not discovered by the senses.

The planet earth, so steadfast though she seem,
Insensibly three different motions moves. Milt. Par. Lost.

The hills rise insensibly, and leave the eye a vast un-

INSENSIBLY. adv. [from insensible.]

1. Imperceptibly; in such a manner as is not discovered by the senses.

The planet earth, so steadfast though she seem,
Insensibly three different motions moves. Milt. Par. Lost.

The hills rise insensibly, and leave the eye a vast unterrupted prospect. Addison on Italy.

2. By slow degrees.

Equal they were form'd,
Save what fin hath impair'd, which yet hath wrought

Insensibly. Milton.

Proposals agreeable to our passions will insensibly prevail upon our weakness. Rogers's Sermons.

Cadmus

Insensibly came on her side. Swift.

3. Without mental or corporal sense.

INSEPARABILITY. n. f. [from inseparable.] The quality of inseparableness; being such as cannot be severed or divided.

The parts of pure space are immovable, which follows from their inseparability, motion being nothing but change of distance between any two things; but this cannot be between parts that are inseparable. Locke.

INSEPARABLE. adj. [inseparabile, French; inseparabilis, Latin.]

Not to be disjoined; united to as not to be parted.

Ancient times figure both the incorporation and inseparable conjunction of counsel with kings, and the wife and politic use of counsel by kings. Bacon.

Thou, my shade,
Inseparably, must with me along;

For death from sin no pow'r can separate. Milt. Par. Lost.

Care and toil came into the world with sin, and remain ever since inseparable from it. South's Sermons.

No body feels pain, that he wishes not to be eased of,
with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it. Locke.

The parts of pure space are inseparable one from the other, so that the continuity cannot be separated, neither really nor mentally. Locke.

Together out they fly,
Inseparable now the truth and lie;

And this or that unmixt no mortal ear shall find. Pope.

INSEPARABLY. adv. [from inseparable.] With indissoluble union.

Drowning of metals is, when the baser metal is so incorporate with the more rich as it cannot be separated; as if silver should be inseparably incorporated with gold. Bacon.

Him thou shalt enjoy,
Inseparably thine. Milton.

Atheists must confess, that before that assigned period matter had existed eternally, inseparably endued with this principle of attraction; and yet had never attracted nor convened before, during that infinite duration. Bentley's Sermons.

To INSERT. v. a. [insero, Fr. inserto, insertum, Latin.] To place in or amongst other things.

Those words were very weakly inserted, where they are so liable to misconception. Stillin's Lect.

With the worthy gentleman's name I will insert it at length in one of my papers. Addison.

It is the editor's interest to insert what the author's judgment had rejected. Swift.

Poetry and oratory omit things essential, and

2. Unimportance.
As I was ruminating on that I had seen, I could not forbear reflecting on the insignificancy of human art, when set in comparison with the designs of providence. Addison's Guardian.
My annals are in mouldy mildews wrought,
With easy insignificance of thought. Garth.
- INSIGNIFICANT. adj. [in and significant.]
1. Wanting meaning; void of signification.
"Till you can weight and gravity explain,
Those words are insignificant and vain." Blackmore.
2. Unimportant; wanting weight; ineffectual.
That I might not be vapoured down by insignificant testimonies, I presumed to use the great name of your society to annihilate all such arguments. Glavin's Scipio's Preface.
Columbus robs the publick of all that benefit that it may justly claim from the worth and virtue of particular persons, by rendering their virtue utterly insignificant. South's Sermons.
All the arguments to a good life will be very insignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon such cheap terms. Tillotson's Sermons.
Nothing can be more contemptible and insignificant than the scum of a people, infligated against a king. Addison.
In a hemorrhage from the lungs, no remedy so proper as bleeding, often repeated: flypicks are often insignificant. Arb.
- INSIGNIFICANTLY. adv. [from insignificant.]
1. Without meaning.
Birds are taught to use articulate words, yet they understand not their import, but use them insignificantly, as the organ or pipe renders the tune, which it understands not. Hale.
2. Without importance or effect.
INSINCERE. adj. [insincerus, Lat. in and sincere.]
1. Not what he appears; not hearty; dissembling; unfaithful.
2. Not sound; corrupted.
Ah why, Penelope, this causeless fear,
To render sleep's soft blessings insincere?
Alike devote to sorrow's dire extreme,
The day reflection, and the midnight dream. Pope.
INSINCERITY. n. f. [from insincere.] Diffimulation; want of truth or fidelity.
If men should always act under a mask, and in disguise, that indeed betrays design and insincerity. Brown's Notes on the Ode.
TO INSINER. v. a. [in and sinew.] To strengthen; to confirm.
All members of our cause,
That are insinuated to this action. Shakespeare, H. IV.
- INSINUANT. adj. [French.] Having the power to gain favour.
Men not so quick perhaps of conceit as slow to passions, and commonly less inventive than judicious, howsoever prove very plausible, insinuant, and fortunate men. Watson.
TO INSINUATE. v. a. [insinuare, Fr. insinuer, Lat. in.]
1. To introduce any thing gently.
The water easily insinuates itself into and placidly diffuses the vessels of vegetables. Woodward.
2. To push gently into favour or regard; commonly with the reciprocal pronoun.
There is no particular evil which hath not some appearance of goodness, whereby to insinuate itself. Hooker.
At the stile of Rhee he insinuated himself into the very good grace of the duke of Buckingham. Clarendon.
3. To hint; to insinuate indirectly.
And all the fictions bards pursue
Do but insinuate what's true. Swift.
4. To instill; to infuse gently.
All the art of rhetoric, besides order and clearness, are for nothing else but to insinuate wrong ideas, move the passions, and thereby mislead the judgment. Locke.
TO INSINUATE. v. n.
1. To wheedle; to gain on the affections by gentle degrees.
I love no colours; and without all colour
Of base insinuating flattery. Shakespeare, H. VI.
2. To steal into imperceptibly; to be conveyed insensibly.
Pestilential miasms insinuate into the humoral and consistent parts of the body. Harvey.
3. I know not whether Milton does not use this word, according to its etymology, for, to enfold; to wreath; to wind.
Close the serpent fly
Insinuating of his fatal gule
Gave proof unheeded. Milton.
INSINUATION. n. f. [insinuation, Lat. insinuation, Fr. from insinuer.] The power of pleasing or stealing upon the affections.
When the industry of one man hath settled the work, a new man, by insinuation or misinformation, may not supplant him without a just cause. Bacon.
He had a natural insinuation and address, which made him acceptable in the best company. Clarendon.
INSINUATIVE. adj. [from insinuate.] Stealing on the affections.
It is a strange insinuator power which example and custom have upon us. Government of the Tongue.
INSINUATOR. n. f. [insinuator, Lat.] He that insinuates. Ainsl.
INSIPID. adj. [insipidus, French; insipidus, Latin.]

1. Without taste; without power of affecting the organs of gust.
Some earths yield, by distillation, a liquor very far from being inodorous or insipid. Boyle.
This chyle is the natural and alimentary puita, which the ancients described as insipid. Flojer on the Humours.
She lays some useful bile aside,
To tinge the chyle's insipid tide. Prior.
2. Without spirit; without pathos; flat; dull; heavy.
The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for Ptolemy;
A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of ashes that o'er-lays your fire. Dryd. Cleon.
Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryd. Don Selaf.
- INSIPIDITY. n. f. [insipiditas, Fr. from insipid.]
INSIPIDNESS. n. f. [insipiditas, Fr. from insipid.]
1. Want of taste.

Dryden's lines shine strongly through the insipidity of Tate's. Pope.
INSIPIDLY. adv. [from insipid.] Without taste; dully.
One great reason why many children abandon themselves wholly to silly sports, and trifle away all their time insipidly, is because they have found their curiosity balked. Locke.
INSIPIDITY. n. f. [insipiditas, Latin.] Folly; want of understanding.
- TO INSIST. v. n. [insister, French; insiste, Latin.]
1. To stand or rest upon.
The combs being double, the cells on each side the partition are so ordered, that the angles on one side insist upon the centers of the bottom of the cells on the other side. Reaumur.
2. Not to recede from terms or assertions; to persist in.
Upon such large terms, and so absolute,
As our conditions shall insist upon,
Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains. Shakespeare.
3. To dwell upon in discourse.
Were there no other act of hostility but that which we have hitherto insisted on, the intercepting of her supplies were irreparably injurious to her. Decay of Piety.
INSISTENT. adj. [insistent, Latin.] Resting upon any thing.
The breadth of the substruction must be at least double to the insistent wall. Watson.
INSISTENCY. n. f. [in and sitis, Latin.] Exemption from thirst.
What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature, for the use we make of him? The docility of an elephant, and the insistency of a camel for travelling in deserts. Grew.
INSISTION. n. f. [insistio, Latin.] The insention or ingratment of one branch into another.
Without the use of these we could have nothing of culture or civility: no tillage or agriculture, no pruning or lopping, grafting or insistion. Ray on the Creation.
INSISTURE. n. f. [from insist.] This word seems in Shakespeare to signify constancy or regularity.
The heav'ns themselves, the planets, and the centre,
Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
Office and custom, in all line of order. Shakespeare.
TO INSINARE. v. a. [in and snare.]
1. To intrap; to catch in a trap, gin, or snare; to inveigle.
Why strewst thou sugar on that bottled spider,
Whose deadly web insinareth thee about. Shakespeare, R. III.
She insinard. Milton.
Mankind with her fair looks.
By long experience Durfey may no doubt
Insinare a gudgeon, or perhaps a trout;
Though Dryden once exclaim'd in partial spite;
He fish'd!—because the man attempts to write. Ponten.
2. To intangle in difficulties or perplexities.
That which in a great part, in the weightiest causes belonging to this present controversy, hath insinared the judgments both of sundry good and of some well learned men, is the manifest truth of certain general principles, whereupon the ordinances that serve for usual practice in the church of God are grounded. Hooker.
That the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be insinared. Job xxxiv. 30.
- INSINARER. n. f. [from insinare.] He that insinuates.
INSINUABLE. adj. [insinuable, French; insinuable, Latin.]
1. Averse from conversation.
If this austere insinuable life,
Change not your offer made in heat of blood. Shakespeare.
2. Incapable of connexion or union.
The lowest ledge or row must be merely of stones, closely laid, without mortar, which is a general caution for all parts in building that are contiguous to board or timber, because lime and wood are insinuable. Watson's Architecture.
INSOBRIETY. n. f. [in and sobriety.] Drunkenness; want of sobriety.
He whose conscience upbraids him with profaneness towards God, and insobriety towards himself, if he is just to his neighbour, he thinks he has quit course. Decay of Piety.
To

- TO INSOLATE. v. a. [insolare, Latin.] To dry in the sun; to expose to the action of the sun.
INSOLATION. n. f. [insolation, French; from insolare.] Exposition to the sun.
We use these towers for insolation, refrigeration, conservation, and for the view of divers meteors. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
If it have not a sufficient insolation it looketh pale, and attains not its laudable colour: if it be funned too long, it suffereth a torrefaction. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
INSOLENCE. n. f. [insolence, Fr. insolentia, Latin.] Pride exerted in contemptuous and overbearing treatment of others; petulant contempt.
They could not restrain the insolency of O'Neal, who, finding none now to withstand him, made himself lord of those few people that remained. Spenser on Ireland.
Such a nature,
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon; but I do wonder
His insolence can brook to be commanded Under Cominus. Shakespeare.
Flown with insolence and wine. Milton.
Public judgments are the banks and shores upon which God breaks the insolency of sinners, and stays their proud waves. Tillotson.
The steady tyrant man,
Who with the thoughtless insolence of power,
For sport alone, pursues the cruel chase. Thomson.
The fear of any violence, either against his own person or against his son, might deter Penelope from using any endeavours to remove men of such insolence and power. Brown.
TO INSOLVENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To insult; to treat with contempt. A very bad word.
The bishops, who were first faulty, insolenced and affronted. King Charles.
INSOLENT. adj. [insolent, Fr. insolent, Latin.] Contemptuous of others; haughty; overbearing.
We have not pillaged those rich provinces which we refused: victory itself hath not made us insolent masters. Atterbury.
INSOLENTLY. adv. [insolent, Latin.] With contempt of others; haughtily; rudely.
What I must disprove,
He insolently talk'd to me of love. Dryden.
Not faction, when it shook thy regal feat,
Not venates, insolently loud,
Those echoes of a thoughtless crowd,
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree. Dryden.
Briant, being naturally of an haughty temper, treated him very insolently, and more like a criminal than a prisoner of war. Addison's Guardian.
INSOLVABLE. adj. [insolvable, Fr. in and solve.]
1. Not to be solved; not to be cleared; inextricable; such as admits of no solution, or explication.
Spend a few thoughts on the puzzling inquiries concerning vacuums, the doctrine of infinities, indivisibles and incomensurables, wherein there appear some insolvable difficulties. Watson's Improvement of the Mind.
2. That cannot be paid.
INSOLUBLE. adj. [insoluble, French; insolubilis, Latin.]
1. Not to be cleared; not to be resolved.
Admit this, and what shall the Scripture be but a snare and a torment to weak consciences, filling them with infinite scrupulosities, doubts insoluble, and extreme despair. Hooker.
2. Not to be dissolved or separated.
Stony matter may grow in any part of a human body; for when any thing insoluble sticks in any part of the body, it gathers a crust about it. Arbutnot on Diet.
INSOLVENT. adj. [in and solve, Latin.] Unable to pay.
By public declaration he proclaimed himself insolvent of those vast sums he had taken upon credit. Havel.
A farmer accused his guards for robbing him of oxen, and the emperor shot the offenders; but demanding reparation of the accuser for so many brave fellows, and finding him insolvent, compounded the matter by taking his life. Addison.
An insolvent is a man that cannot pay his debts. Watson.
INSOLVENCY. n. f. [from insolvent.] Inability to pay debts.
INSONDUCIBLE. adj. [insondучible, Latin.] So that to such a degree that it hath ever been the use of the conqueror to despise the language of the conquered, and to force him to learn his: so did the Romans always use, insondучible that there is no nation but is sprinkled with their language. Spenser.
To make ground fertile, ashes excel; insondучible as the countries about Aetna have amended made them, for the mischiefs the eruptions do. Bacon's Natural History.
Simonides was an excellent poet, insondучible that he made his fortune by it. L'Estrange.
They made the ground uneven about their nest, insondучible that the fate did not lie flat upon it, but left a free passage underneath. Addison's Guardian.
TO INSPECT. v. a. [inspectio, Latin.] To look into.
INSPECTION. n. f. [inspectio, French; inspectio, Latin.]
1. Prying examination; narrow and close survey.

- With narrow search, and with inspection deep, Milton.
Consider every creature.
Our religion is a religion that dares to be understood; that offers itself to the search of the inquisitive, to the inspection of the feverish and the most awakened reason; for, being secure of her substantial truth and purity, she knows that for her to be seen and looked into, is to be embraced and admired, as there needs no greater argument for men to love the light than to see it. South's Sermons.
2. Superintendence; presiding care. In the first sense it should have into before the object, and in the second sense may admit over; but authors confound them.
We may safely conceal our good deeds from the publick view, when they run no hazard of being diverted to improper ends, for want of our own inspection. Atterbury.
We should apply ourselves to study the perfections of God, and to procure lively and vigorous impressions of his perpetual presence with us, and inspection over us. Atterbury.
The divine inspection into the affairs of the world, doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence. Bentley.
- INSPECTOR. n. f. [Latin.]
1. A prying examiner.
With their new light our bold inspectors press,
Like Cham, to shew their father's nakedness. Denham.
2. A superintendent.
They may travel under a wife inspector or tutor to different parts, that they may bring home useful knowledge. Watts.
INSPECTION. n. f. [inspectio, Lat.] A sprinkling. Ainsl.
TO INSPIRE. v. a. [in and sphere.] To place in an orb or sphere.
Where those immortal shapes
Of bright aereal spirits live inspired,
In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton.

We are weak, dependant creatures, insufficient to our own happiness, full of wants which of ourselves we cannot relieve, exposed to a numerous train of evils which we know not how to divert.

Fasting kills by the bad state, not by the insufficient quantity of fluids.

INSUFFICIENTLY, adv. [from insufficient, Latin; insufficiens, French.] With want of proper ability; not skillfully.

INSUFFLATION, n. f. [from insufflare, Latin; insufflatio, Latin.] The act of breathing upon.

Impediment of hands is a custom of parents in blessing their children, but taken up by the apostles instead of that divine insufflation which Christ used.

INSULAR, adj. [from insula, Latin; insularis, Latin.] Belonging to an island.

Druna, being surrounded with the sea, is hardly to be invaded, having many other insular advantages.

INSULATED, adj. [from insula, Latin; insulatus, Latin.] Not contiguous on any side.

INSULS, adj. [from insulus, Latin; insultus, Latin.] Dull; insipid; heavy.

INSULT, n. f. [from insultus, Latin; insulte, French.] 1. The act of leaping upon any thing. In this sense it has the accent on the last syllable: the sense is rare.

The bull's insult at four the may sustain,

But after ten from nuptial rites refrain.

2. Act of insolence or contempt.

Take the sentence seriously, because raileries are an insult on the unfortunate.

3. To treat with insolence or contempt. It is used sometimes with over, sometimes without a preposition.

The poet makes his hero, after he was gluted by the death of Hector, and the honour he did his friend by insulting over his murderer, to be moved by the tears of King Priam.

4. To trample upon; to triumph over.

To strike at me upon his misconstruction;

When he conjuncts, and flatter his displeasure,

Tript me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,

And put upon him such a deal of man.

So 'scape the insulting fire his narrow jail,

And makes small outlets into open air.

INSULTINGLY, adv. [from insultus, Latin; insultando, Latin.] In a manner of insult; with insolence or contempt.

Ev'n when they sing at ease in full content,

Insulting o'er the toil they underwent,

Yet still they find a future task remain,

To turn the soil.

INSULTER, n. f. [from insultus, Latin.] One who treats another with insolent triumph.

Ev'n man, the merciless insult man;

Man, who rejoices in our sex's weakness,

Shall pity thee.

INSULTINGLY, adv. [from insultus, Latin; insultando, Latin.] With contemptuous triumph.

Insultingly, he made your love his boast;

Gave me my life, and told me what it cost.

INSUPERABLE, n. f. [from insuperabile, Latin.] The quality of being invincible.

INSUPERABLE, adj. [from insuperabilis, Latin.] Invincible; insurmountable; not to be conquered; not to be overcome.

This appears to be an insuperable objection, because of the evidence that sense seems to give it.

Much might be done would we but endeavour; nothing is insuperable to pains and patience.

And middle natures how they long to join,

Yet never pass th' insuperable line.

INSUPERABLENESS, n. f. [from insuperabile, Latin.] Invincibility; impossibility to be surmounted.

INSUPERABLY, adv. [from insuperabile, Latin.] Invincibly; insurmountably.

Between the grain and the vein of a diamond there is this difference, that the former furthers, the latter being to insuperably hard, hinders the splitting of it.

INSUPPORTABLE, adj. [from insupportabile, Latin; insupportabilis, Latin.] Intolerable; insufferable; not to be endured.

A disgrace put upon a man in company is insupportable; it is heightened according to the greatness, and multiplied according to the number of the persons that hear.

The biter the enemies are, the more insupportable is the insolence.

The thought of being nothing after death is a burden insupportable to a virtuous man: we naturally aim at happiness, and cannot bear to have it confined to our present being.

To those that dwell under or near the Equator, this Spring would be a most pestilent and insupportable Summer; and as for those countries that are nearer the Poles, a perpetual Spring will not do their business.

INSUPPORTABLENESS, n. f. [from insupportabile, Latin.] Insufferableness; the state of being beyond endurance.

Then fell the to fo pitiful a declaration of the insupportableness of her desires, that Dorus's ears procur'd his eyes with tears to give testimony how much they suffered for her suffering.

INSUPPORTABLY, adv. [from insupportabile, Latin; insupportabiliter, Latin.] Beyond endurance.

But fastest he who stood aloof,

When insupportably his foot advanced,

In scorn of their proud arms and warlike tools,

Spurn'd them to death by troops.

The first day's audience sufficiently convinced me, that the poem was insupportably too long.

INSURMOUNTABLE, adj. [from insurmountabile, Latin; insurmountabilis, Latin.] Insurmountable; unconquerable.

This difficulty is insurmountable, till I can make simplicity and variety the same.

Hope thinks nothing difficult; despair tells us, that difficulty is insurmountable.

INSURMOUNTABLY, adv. [from insurmountabile, Latin; insurmountabiliter, Latin.] Invincibly; unconquerably.

INSURRECTION, n. f. [from insurgere, Latin; insurrectio, Latin.] A factitious rising; a rebellious commotion.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing,

And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:

The genius and the mortal instruments

Are then in council; and the state of man,

Like to a little kingdom, suffers then

The nature of an insurrection.

This city of old time hath made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and fedition have been made therein.

There shall be a great insurrection upon those that fear the Lord.

Insurrections of base people are commonly more furious in their beginnings.

The trade of Rome had like to have suffered another great stroke by an insurrection in Egypt, excited by Achilleus.

INSURRECTION, n. f. [from insurgere, Latin; insurrectio, Latin.] The act of whifpering.

INTACTIBLE, adj. [from intactus, Latin; intactibilis, Latin.] Not perceptible to the touch.

INTAGLIO, n. f. [Italian.] Any thing that has figures engraved on it.

We meet with the figures which Juvenal describes on antique intagli and medals.

INTASTABLE, adj. [from intastus, Latin; intastibilis, Latin.] Not palatable; not fit to be tasted.

Ev'n when they sing at ease in full content,

Insulting o'er the toil they underwent,

Yet still they find a future task remain,

To turn the soil.

INSULTER, n. f. [from insultus, Latin.] One who treats another with insolent triumph.

Ev'n man, the merciless insult man;

INTA'STABLE. adj. [in and taste.] Not raising any sensations in the organs of taste.

Something which is invisible, intangible, and intangible, as existing only in the fancy, may produce a pleasure superior to that of sense. Grew's Cymol.

INTEGER. n. f. [Latin.] The whole of any thing.

As not only signified a piece of money, but any integer; from whence is derived the word ace, or unit. Arbutnot.

INTEGRAL. adj. [integral, French; integer, Latin.]

1. Whole: applied to a thing considered as comprising all its constituent parts.

A local motion keepeth bodies integral, and their parts together. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Uninjured; complete; not defective.

No wonder if one remain speechless, though of integral principles, who, from an infant, should be bred up amongst mutes, and have no teaching. Holder.

3. Not fractional; not broken into fractions.

INTEGRAL. n. f. The whole made up of parts.

Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, nerves, and integrals of the human body. Hale.

Consider the infinite complications and combinations of several concurrences to the constitution and operation of almost every integral in nature. Hale.

A mathematical whole is better called integral, when the several parts, which make up the whole, are distinct, and each may subsist apart. Watts.

INTEGRITY. n. f. [integrité, Fr. integritas, from integer, Lat.]

1. Honesty; uncorrupt mind; purity of manners; uncorrupt-edness.

Your dishonesty

Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state

Of that integrity which should become it. Shakespeare. Coriol.

Macbeth, this noble passion,

Child of integrity, hath from my soul

Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts

To thy good truth and honour. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Whoever has examined both parties cannot go far towards the extremes of either, without violence to his integrity or understanding. Swift.

The libertine, instead of attempting to corrupt our integrity, will conceal and disguise his own vices. Rogers.

2. Purity; genuine unadulterate state.

Language continued long in its purity and integrity. Hale.

3. Intireness; unbroken whole.

Take away this transformation, and there is no chasm, nor can it affect the integrity of the action. Braune.

INTEGUMENT. n. f. [integumentum, integro, Lat.] Any thing that covers or envelops another.

He could no more live without his frize-coat than without his skin: it is not indeed so properly his coat, as what the anatomists call one of the integuments of the body. Addison.

INTELLECT. n. f. [intellectus, Fr. intellectus, Lat.] The intellectual mind; the power of understanding.

All heart they live, all head, all eye, all ear,

All intellects, all sense. Milton.

All those arts, rarities, and inventions, which vulgar minds gaze at, and the ingenious pursue, are but the reliques of an intellect defaced with sin and time. South's Sermons.

INTELLECTION. n. f. [intellection, Fr. intellectio, Latin.] The act of understanding.

Simple apprehension denotes the soul's naked intellection of an object, without either composition or deduction. Glauco.

A determinate intellection of the modes of being, never hinted by the senses, can realize chimeras. Glauco. Scip.

They will say 'tis not the bulk or substance of the animal spirit, but its motion and agility, that produces intellection and sense. Bentley's Sermons.

INTELLECTIVE. adj. [intellectif, Fr. from intellectus.] Having power to understand.

If a man as intellective be created, then either he means the whole man, or only that by which he is intellective. Glauco.

INTELLECTUAL. adj. [intellectual, French; intellectualis, low Latin.]

1. Relating to the understanding; belonging to the mind; transacted by the understanding.

Religion teaches us to present to God our bodies as well as our souls: if the body serves the soul in actions natural and civil, and intellectual, it must not be eaded in the only offices of religion. Taylor.

2. Mental; comprising the faculty of understanding; belonging to the mind.

Logic is to teach us the right use of our reason, or intellectual powers. Watts.

3. Ideal; perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

In a dark vision's intellectual scene,

Beneath a bow'd-for sorrow made,

The melancholy Cowley lay. Cowley.

A train of phantoms in wild order rose,

And, join'd, this intellectual scene compose. Pope.

4. Having the power of understanding.

INT

Anaxagoras and Plato term the maker of the world an intellectual worker. Hobbes.

Who would lose,

Though full of pain, this intellectual being,

Those thoughts that wander through eternity,

To perish rather, swallow'd up and lost,

In the wide womb of uncreated night,

Devoid of sense and motion? Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. Proposed as the object not of the senses but intellect; as Cudworth names his book the intellectual system of the universe.

INTELLECTUAL. n. f. Intellect; understanding; mental powers or faculties. This is little in use.

Her husband not nigh,

Whose higher intellectual more I shun. Milton.

The fancies of most, like the index of a clock, are moved but by the inward springs of the corporeal machine; which, even on the most sublimed intellectuals, is dangerously influential. Glauco. Scip.

I have not consulted the repute of my intellectuals in bringing their weaknesses into such discerning preferences. Glauco.

INTELLIGENCE. } n. f. [intelligence, French; intelligentia,

INTELLIGENCE. } Latin.]

1. Commerce of information; notice; mutual communication; account of things distant or secret.

It was perceived there had not been in the catholics, either at Armenia or at Seleucia, so much foresight as to provide that true intelligence might pass between them of what was done. Hobbes, &c.

A mankind witch! hence with her, out of door!

A most intelligence bawd! Shakespeare.

He furnished his employed men liberally with money, to draw on and reward intelligences; giving them also in charge to advertise continually what they found. Bacon's H. VII.

The advertisements of neighbour princes are always to be regarded, for that they receive intelligence from better authors than persons of inferior note. Hayward.

Let all the pallasses

Be well secur'd, that no intelligence

May pass between the prince and them. Donham's Sophy.

Those tales had been sung to lull children asleep, before ever Berolus set up his intelligence office at Coos. Bentley.

2. Commerce of acquaintance; terms on which men live one with another.

Faction followers are worse to be liked, which follow not upon affection to him with whom they range themselves; whereupon commonly ensue that ill intelligence that we see between great personages. Bacon.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence than any friendship with the favourites. Clarendon.

3. Spirit; unbounded mind.

How fully hast thou satisfied me, pure intelligence of heav'n, angel! Milt. Paradise Lost.

There are divers ranks of created beings intermediate between the glorious God and man, as the glorious angels and created intelligences. Hale.

They hoped to get the favour of the houses, and by the favour of the houses they hoped for that of the intelligences, and by their favour for that of the supreme God. Stillingfleet.

The regularity of motion, visible in the great variety and curiosity of bodies, is a demonstration that the whole mass of matter is under the conduct of a mighty intelligence. Culter.

Satan, appearing like a cherub to Uriel, the intelligence of the sun circumvented him even in his own province. Dryden.

4. Understanding; skill.

Heaps of huge words, up hoarded hideously,

They think to be chief praise of poetry;

And thereby wanting due intelligence,

Have marr'd the face of goodly poesy. Speyer.

INTELLIGENCER. n. f. [from intelligence.] One who sends or conveys news; one who gives notice of private or distant transactions; one who carries messages between parties.

His eyes, being his diligent intelligencers, could carry unto him no other news but discomfortable. Sidney.

Who hath not heard it spoken

How deep you were within the books of heav'n?

To us, th' imagin'd voice of heav'n itself;

The very opener and intelligencer

Between the grace and fancities of heav'n,

And our dull workings. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

If they had instructions to that purpose, they might be the best intelligencers to the king of the true state of his whole kingdom. Bacon.

They are the best sort of intelligencers; for they have a way into the inmost closets of princes. Hobbes.

They have news-gatherers and intelligencers, who make them acquainted with the conversation of the whole kingdom. Speyer.

INTELLIGENT. adj. [intelligent, Fr. intelligent, Latin.]

His heart or head possessing, soon inspir'd

With act intelligential. Milton's Paradise Lost.

INTELLIGENTLY. n. f. [from intelligence.]

1. Possibility to be understood.

2. The power of understanding; intellect. Not proper.

The soul's nature consists in intelligibility. Glauco. Scip.

INTELLIGIBLE. adj. [intelligibilis, Fr. intelligibilis, Latin.]

To be conceived by the understanding; possible to be understood.

We shall give satisfaction to the mind, to shew it a fair and intelligible account of the deluge.

Something must be lost in all translations, but the sense will remain, which would otherwise be lost, or at least be maimed, when it is scarce intelligible. Dryden.

Many natural duties relating to God, ourselves, and our neighbours, would be exceeding difficult for the bulk of mankind to find out by reason; therefore it has pleased God to express them in a plain manner, intelligible to souls of the lowest capacity. Watts.

INTELLIGIBLENESS. n. f. [from intelligible.] Possibility to be understood; perspicuity.

It is in our ideas that both the rightness of our knowledge, and the propriety or intelligibility of our speaking, consists. Locke.

INTELLIGIALLY. adv. [from intelligible.] So as to be understood; clearly; plainly.

The genuine sense, intelligibly told,

Shews a translator both discreet and bold. Roscommon.

INTEMPERANCE. n. f. [intemperance, Fr. intemperantia, Lat.]

INTEMPERANCY. } Want of temperance; want of moderation; excess in meat or drink.

Boundless intemperance

In nature is a tyranny; it hath been

The fall of many kings. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Another law of Lycurgus induced to intemperance and all kind of incontinency. Haleswell.

Some, as thou saw'st, by violent stroke shall die;

By fire, flood, famine, by intemperance more

In meats and drinks, which on the earth shall bring

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew

Before thee shall appear; that thou may'st know

What misery th' inabstinence of Eve

Shall bring on men. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

The Lacedaemonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness and intemperance, by bringing a drunken man into their company. Watts.

INTEMPERATE. adj. [intemperant, Fr. intemperatus, Latin.]

1. Immoderate in appetite; excessive in meat or drink; drunken; gluttonous.

More women should die than men, if the number of burials answered in proportion to that of sicknesses; but men, being more intemperate than women, die as much by reason of their vices, as women do by the infirmity of their sex. Grant.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unanswerable doubts, which, over their cups or their coffee, they pretend to have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the intemperate man to abandon his revell, and I dare undertake that all their giant-like objections shall vanish. South.

2. Passionate; ungovernable; without rule.

You are more intemperate in your blood

Than those pamper'd animals,

That rage in savage sensuality. Shakespeare.

Use not thy mouth to intemperate swearing; for therein is the word of sin. Ecclus. xxiii. 13.

INTEMPERATELY. adv. [from intemperate.]

If an Englishman considers our world, how interse it is heated, he cannot suppose that it will cool again. Aldis.

INTERSENESS. n. f. [from interse.] The state of being affected to a high degree; force; contrariety to laxity or remission.
The water of standing springs and rivers, that sustains a diminution from the heat above, being evaporated more or less, in proportion to the greater or lesser interse of heat.

INTERSESION. n. f. [interse, Fr. interse, Latin.] The act of forcing or straining any thing; contrariety to remission or relaxation.

Sounds will be carried further with the wind than against the wind; and likewise do rise and fall with the interse or remission of the wind. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Faith differs from hope in the extension of its object, and in the interse of degree. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

INTERSEIVE. adj. [from interse.]

1. Stretched or increased with respect to itself.
As his perfection is infinitely greater than the perfection of a man, so it is infinitely greater than the perfection of an angel; and were it not infinitely greater than the perfection of an angel, it could not be infinitely greater than the perfection of a man, because the interseive distance between the perfection of an angel and of a man is but finite. Hale.

2. Intent; full of care.

Tired with that assiduous attendance and interseive circumspection, which a long fortune did require, he was not unwilling to bestow upon another some part of the pains. Watt.

INTERSEIVELY. adv. To a greater degree.

God and the good angels are more free than we are, that is, interseively in the degree of freedom; but not extensively in the latitude of the object, according to a liberty of exercise, but not of specification. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

INTERSE. adj. [intentus, Latin.] Anxiously diligent; fixed with close application.

Diffractions in England made most men intent to their own safety.

When we use but those means which God hath laid before us, it is a good sign that we are rather intent upon God's glory than our own convenience. Taylor.

The general himself had been more intent upon his command.

They on their mirth and dance. Clarendon.

Intent.

Of action eager, and intent on thought, Milton.

The chiefs your honourable danger fought. Dryden.

Were men as intent upon this as on things of lower concernment, there are none so enslaved to the necessities of life, who might not find many vacancies that might be husbanded to this advantage of their knowledge. Locke.

Whilst they are intent on one particular part of their theme, they bend all their thoughts to prove or disprove some proposition that relates to that part, without attention to the consequences that may affect another. Watt.

Be intent and solicitous to take up the meaning of the speaker. Watt.

INTERSEV. n. f. [from interse.] A design; a purpose; a drift; a view formed; meaning.

Although the Scripture of God be stored with infinite variety of matter in all kinds, although it abound with all sorts of laws, yet the principal intent of Scripture is to deliver the laws of duties supernatural. Hosker.

INT

Whereas commandment was given to destroy all places where the Canaanites had served the gods, this precept had reference unto a special intent and purpose, which was that there should be but one place wherunto the people might bring offerings.

Those that accuse him in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

I'll urge his hatred more to Clarence;
And, if I fail not in my deep intent,
Clarence hath not another day to live. Shakespeare, R. III.

There is an incurable blindness caused by a resolution not to see; and, to all intents and purposes, he who will not open his eyes is for the present as blind as he that cannot. South.

He was a miserable creature to all intents and purposes. L'Estrange's Fables.

This fury fit for her intent she chose;
One who delights in wars. Dryden; Æn.

The Athenians sent their fleet to Sicily, upon pretence only to assist the Leontines against Syracuse; but with an intent to make themselves masters of that island. Greus.

Of darkness visible so much he lent,
As half to shew, half veil the deep intent. Duncloud.

INTENTION. n. f. [intention, French; intention, Latin.]

1. Eagerness of desire; closeness of attention; deep thought; vehemence or ardour of mind.

Intention is when the mind with great earnestness, and of choice, fixes its view on any idea, considers it on every side, and will not be called off by the ordinary solicitation of other ideas. Locke.

Effectual prayer is joined with a vehement intention of the inferior powers of the soul, which cannot therein long continue without pain: it hath been therefore thought good, by turns, to interpose still somewhat for the higher part of the mind and the understanding to work upon. Hosker.

She did court o'er my exterior with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning glass. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

In persons possessed with other notions of religion, the understanding cannot quit these but by great examination; which cannot be done without some labour and intention of the mind, and the thoughts dwelling a considerable time upon the survey and discussion of each particular. South's Sermons.

2. Design; purpose.

Most part of chironical distempers proceed from laxity of the fibres; in which case the principal intention is to restore the tone of the solid parts. Arbutnot on Aliment.

3. The state of being intense or strained. This for distinction is more generally and more conveniently written intense.

The operations of agents admit of intention and remission; but effences are not capable of such variation. Locke.

INTERSEIV. adj. [intentional, Fr. from intention.] Delighted; done by design.

The glory of God is the great end which every intelligent being is bound to consult, by a direct and intentional service. Regier's Sermons.

INTENTIONALLY. adv. [from intentional.]

1. By design; with fixed choice.
I find in myself that this inward principle doth exert many of its actions intentionally and purposely. Hale.

Hear his sighs, though mute!
 Unskillful with what words to pray, let me Interpret for him. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

INTERPRETABLE. adj. [from interpret.] Capable of being expounded or deciphered.

No man's face is actionable: these singularities are interpretable from more innocent causes. Collier.

INTERPRETATION. n. s. [interpretation, Fr. interpretatio, Lat. from interpret.]

1. The act of interpreting; explanation.
 This is a poor epitome of your's,
 Which, by th' interpretation of full time,
 May shew like all yourself. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Look how we can, or sad or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks. Shakespeare's H. IV.

2. The sense given by an interpreter; expostion.
 If it be obscure or uncertain what they meant, charity, I hope, constraineth no man, which standeth doubtful of their minds, to lean to the hardest and worst interpretation that their words can carry. Hooker.

The primitive Christians knew how the Jews, who preceded our Saviour, interpreted these predictions, and the marks by which the Messiah would be discovered; and how the Jewish doctors, who succeeded him, deviated from the interpretations of their forefathers. Addison.

3. The power of explaining.
 We beseech thee to prosper this great sign, and to give us the interpretation and use of it in mercy. Bacon.

INTERPRETATIVE. adj. [from interpret.] Collected by interpretation.

Though the creed apostolick were sufficient, yet when the church hath erected that additional bulwork against heretics, the rejecting their additions may justly be deemed an interpretative siding with heresies. Hammond.

INTERPRETATIVELY. adv. [from interpretative.] As may be collected by interpretation.

By this provision the Almighty interpretatively speaks to him in this manner: I have now placed thee in a well furnished world. Roy on the Creation.

INTERPRETER. n. s. [interprete, Fr. interpreter, Latin.] 1. An explainer; an expostion; an expounder.

What we oft do best,
 By sick interpreters, or weak ones, is
 Not ours, or not allow'd: what worst, as oft,
 Hitting a grosser quality, is cry'd up
 For our best act. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

In the beginning the earth was without form and void; a fluid, dark, confused mass, and so it is understood by interpreters, both Hebrew and Christian. Barnet.

We think most mens actions to be the interpreters of their thoughts. Locke.

2. A translator.
 Nor word for word be careful to transport,
 With the same faith as an interpreter. Fanshawe.

How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake such a work with spirit, when he considers that in an age or two he shall hardly be understood without an interpreter. Swift.

TO INTERSECT. v. a. [intersecare, Latin.] To cut; to divide each other mutually.

Perfect and viviparous quadrupeds so stand in their position of proneness, that the opposite joints of neighbour legs consist in the same plane; and a line descending from their navel intersects at right angles the axis of the earth.

Excited by a vigorous loadstone, it will somewhat depress its animated extreme, and intersect the horizontal circumference.

TO INTERSECT. v. n. To meet and cross each other.

The sagittal future usually begins at that point where these lines intersect.

INTERSECTION. n. f. [intersectio, Lat. from intersect.] Point where lines cross each other.

They did pour out interchangeably from side to side in forms of arches, without any intersection or meeting aloft, because the pipes were not opposite.

The first star of Arctis, in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection, which is now elongated, and moved eastward twenty-eight degrees.

Ships would move in one and the same surface; and consequently must needs encounter, when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross ones.

TO INTERSECT. v. a. [interfero, Lat.] To put in between other things.

If I may insert a short philosophical speculation, the depth of the sea is determined in Pliny to be fifteen furlongs.

INTERSEXTION. n. f. [from interfero.] An insertion, of thing inserted between any thing.

These two intersextions were clear explications of the apostle's old form, God the father, ruler of all, which contained an acknowledgement of the unity.

TO INTERPERSE. v. a. [interperfo, Lat.] To scatter here and there among other things.

The possibility of a body's moving into a void space beyond the utmost bounds of body, as well as into a void space interspersed amongst bodies, will always remain clear.

It is the editor's interest to insert what the author's judgment had rejected; and care is taken to interperse these additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought without purchasing something unworthy of the author.

INTERPERSION. n. f. [from interperfo.] The act of scattering here and there.

For want of the interperfection of now and then an elegiac or a lyric ode.

INTERSTELLAR. adj. [inter and stellar, Lat.] Intervening between the stars.

The interstellar sky hath so much affinity with the star, that there is a rotation of that as well as of the star.

INTERSTICE. n. f. [interstitium, Lat. interstices, Latin.] Space between one thing and another.

The sun shining through a large prism upon a comb placed immediately behind the prism, his light, which passed through the interstices of the teeth fell upon a white paper: the breadths of the teeth were equal to their interstices, and seven teeth together with their interstices took up an inch in breadth.

The force of the fluid will separate the smallest particles which compose the fibres, so as to leave vacant interstices in those places where they cohered before.

INTERSTICE. n. f. [interstitium, Lat. interstices, Latin.] Space between one act and another.

I will point out the interstices of time which ought to be between one citation and another.

INTERVAL. n. f. [intervallum, Fr. intervallum, Latin.] 1. Space between places; interstice; vacancy; space unoccupied; void place; vacancy; vacant space.

With any obstacle let all the light be now stopped which passes through any one interval of the teeth, so that the range of colours which comes from thence may be taken away, and you will see the light of the rest of the ranges to be expanded into the place of the range taken away, and there to be coloured.

INTERVAL. n. f. [intervallum, Fr. intervallum, Latin.] 2. Time passing between two assignable points.

The century and half following, to the end of the third Punic war, was a very busy period at Rome; the intervals between every war being so short.

INTERVAL. n. f. [intervallum, Fr. intervallum, Latin.] 3. Remission of a delirium or distemper.

Though he had a long illness, considering the great heat with which it raged, yet his intervals of sense being few and short, left but little room for the offices of devotion.

TO INTERVENE. v. n. [intervenire, Lat. intervenir, Fr.] To come between things or persons; to be intercepted; to make intervals.

While so near each other thus all day
Our talk we chafe, what wonder, if so near,
Looks intervene, and smiles.

Eighteen the danger of an action, and the possibilities of misadventure, and every cross accident that can intervene, to be either a mercy on God's part, or a fault on ours.

INTERVIEW. n. f. [from the verb.] Opposition, or perhaps interview. A word out of use.

They had some sharper and some milder differences, which might easily happen in such an interview of grandees, both vehement on the parts which they thwarted.

INTERVIEW. n. f. [from the verb.] Opposition, or perhaps interview. A word out of use.

There be intervenient in the life of eight, in tones, two hemolls or half notes.

INT

To INTHRONÉ. v. a. [in and throne.] To raise to royalty; to seat on a throne.

One, chief, in gracious dignity intron'd.
Shines o'er the rest. Thomson's Summer, l. 395.

INTIMACY. n. f. [from intimate.] Close familiarity.
It is in our power to confine our friendships and intimacies to men of virtue. Rogers's Sermons.

INTIMATE. adj. [intimado, Spanish; intimus, Lat.]
1. Inmost; inward; intimate.
They knew not

That what I mention'd was of God, I knew
From intimate impulse, and therefore urged on
The marriage. Milton's Agonist, l. 221.

Fear being so intimate to our natures, it is the strongest bond of laws. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Near; not kept at distance.
Moses was with him in the retirements of the mount, received there his private instructions; and when the multitude were thunders away from any approach, he was honoured with an intimate and immediate admission. South's Sermons.

3. Familiar; closely acquainted.
United by this sympathetick bond,
You grow familiar, intimate, and fond. Recommon.

INTIMATE. n. f. [intimado, Spanish; intime, French; intimus, Latin.] A familiar friend; one who is trusted with our thoughts.

The design was to entertain his reason with a more equal converse, assign him an intimate whose intellect as much corresponded with his as did the outward form. Gov. Tongue.

To INTIMATE. v. a. [intimer, French; intimare, low Latin.] To hint; to point out indirectly, or not very plainly.

Alexander Van Suchten tells us, that by a way he intimates, may be made a mercury of copper, not of the silver colour of other mercuries, but green. Boyle.

The names of simple ideas and substances, with the abstract ideas in the mind, intimate some real existence, from which was derived their original pattern. Locke.

'Tis the divinity that flirts within us;
'Tis heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison's Cato.

INTIMATELY. adv. [from intimate.]
1. Closely; with intermixture of parts.

The same economy is observed in the circulation of the chyle with the blood, by mixing it intimately with the parts of the fluid to which it is to be assimilated. Arbutnot.

2. Nearly; inseparably.
Quality, as it regards the mind, has its rise from knowledge and virtue, and is that which is more essential to us, and more intimately united with us. Addison's Spect. N. 219.

3. Familiarly; with close friendship.
INTIMATION. n. f. [intimation, Fr. from intimate.] Hint; oblique or indirect declaration or direction.

Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations; the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in his heart. South's Sermons.

Of those that are only probable we have some reasonable intimations, but not a demonstrative certainty. Woodward.

Besides the more solid parts of learnings, there are several little intimations to be met with on medals. Addison.

INTIME. adj. Inward; being within the mass; not being external, or on the surface; internal.

As to the composition or dissolution of mixed bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intime application of the agents, water hath the principality and excess over earth. Digby on Bodies.

To INTIMIDATE. v. a. [intimider, French; in and timidus, Lat.] To make fearful; to daunt; to make cowardly.

Now guilt once harbour'd in the conscious breast, Intimidates the brave, degrades the great. Irene.

INTIRE. n. f. [intire, Lat. entire, French; better written entire, which see, and all its derivatives.] Whole; undiminished; broken.

The lawful power of making laws, to command whole politic societies of men, belongeth to properly unto the same intire societies, that for any prince to exercise the same of himself, and not either by express commission immediately and personally received from God, or else by authority derived at the first from their consent upon whose persons he imposes laws, it is no better than mere tyranny. Hooker.

INTIRENESS. n. f. [from intire; better written entireness.] Wholeness; integrity.

So shall all times find me the same;
You this intireness better may fulfil,
Who have the pattern with you fill. Donne.

INTRO. prep. [in and re.]

1. Noting entrance with regard to place.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance an habitual inclination to the fire it held, how much more may education, being a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature. Watson.

To give life to that which has yet no being, is to frame a living creature, fashion the parts, and having fitted them together, to put into them a living soul. Locke.

Water introduces into vegetables the matter it bears along with it. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

Acrid substances, which pass into the capillary tubes, multiply and irritate them into greater contraction. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Noting penetration beyond the outside, or some action which reaches beyond the superficies or open part.

To look into letters already opened or dropt is held an ungenerous act.

2. Noting a new state to which any thing is brought by the agency of a cause.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words.

Compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than such as they are divided into by the fire.

A man must in himself into a love of other men's sins, for a bare notion of this black art will not carry him far. South.

Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate,
Where the mad people rise against the state,
To look them into duty, and command

An awful silence with thy lifted hand. Dryden's Regius.

It concerns every man that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest ferocities to enquire into these matters.

He is not a frail being, that he should be tired into compliance by the force of adiduous application.

In hollow bottoms, if any fountains chance to rise, they naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can find any issue.

It would have been all irretrievably lost, was it not by this means collected and brought into one mass.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author; and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be always frightening and affrighting men into an acknowledgement of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence.

A man may whore and drink himself into atheism; but it is impossible he should think himself into it.

INTOLERABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Lat. intolerable, Fr.]

1. Insufferable; not to be endured; not to be born; having any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured.

If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it is unreasonable.

His awful presence did the crowd surprize,
Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;
Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,
So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day. Dryden.

Some men are quickly weary of one thing: the same study long continued in is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes is to a court lady.

From Param's top th' Almighty rode,
Intolerable day proclaim'd the God. Bryant.

2. Bad beyond endurance.

INTOLERABLENESS. n. f. [from intolerable.] Quality of a thing not to be endured.

INTOLERABLY. adv. [from intolerable.] To a degree beyond endurance.

INTOLERANT. adj. [intolerant, French.] Not enduring; not able to endure.

Too great moisture affects human bodies with one class of diseases, and too great dryness with another; the powers of human bodies being limited and intolerant of excesses.

To INTOMB. v. a. [in and tomb.] To inclose in a funeral monument; to bury.

What commandment finally had they for the ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead, after which custom notwithstanding our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intomb'd.

Is't night's predominance or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb. Shakespeare.

Mighty hero's more majestic shades,
And youths intomb'd before their father's eyes. Dryden.

To INTONATE. v. a. [intono, Lat.] To thunder.

INTONATION. n. f. [intonation, Fr. from intonate.] The act of thundering.

To INTOŊE. v. n. [from intone, or rather from tone; intone, French.] To make a slow protracted noise.

So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to as Harmonick twang. Pope's Dunciad, b. ii.

To INTOŊT. v. a. [intortuo, Lat.] To twist; to wrench; to wring.

The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the blood, called animal spirits; and a gland is nothing but a canal variously intorted and wound up together.

With reverent hand the king presents the gold,
Which round th' intorted horns the glider roll'd. Pope.

To INTOXICATE. v. a. [in and toxicum, Latin.] To inebriate; to make drunk.

INT

The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicates; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel

Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

My early mistress, now my ancient muse,
That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth.

What part of wild fury was there in the bacchanals which we have not seen equal'd, if not exceeded by some intoxicating zealots?

Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having quite different qualities from the plant itself; for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine.

INTOXICATION. n. f. [from intoxicare.] Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.

That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected.

Whence can this proceed, but from that besetting intoxication which verbal magic brings upon the mind.

INTOXICABLE. n. f. [intoxicabilis, Lat. intoxicable, Fr.]

1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obstinate.

To love them who loves us is so natural a passion, that even the most intemperate tempers obey its force.

2. Unmanageable; furious.

By what means serpents, and other noxious and more intemperate kinds, as well as the more innocent and useful, got together.

INTOXICABLENESS. n. f. [from intoxicable.] Obstinate; perverness.

INTOXICABLY. adv. [from intoxicable.] Unmanageably; stubbornly.

INTRANQUILITY. n. f. [in and tranquility.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jaculations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquility which makes men impatient of lying in their beds.

INTRANTHUSIVE. v. a. [intranthivus, Latin.]

[In grammar.] A verb intranthusive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object; as, curo, I run.

INTRASMUTABLE. adj. [in and transmutabile.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutable, and therefore call it liquor eternus.

To INTREASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times decas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their feeds
And weak beginnings he intrefused. Shakespeare Henry IV.

To INTRENCH. v. n. [in and trencher, French.]

1. To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another.

Little I desire my scepter should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children.

2. To break with hollows.

His face
Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
Sat on his faded cheek. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.

3. To fortify with a trench; as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.

INTRENCHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained by one of his editors: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it.

I believe Shakespeare intended rather derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher, to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

INT

As easy may it thou the intrenchant air

With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakespeare.

INTRENCHMENT. n. f. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTREPID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Latin.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave.

Argyle
Calm and intrepid in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Teniers dreadful field. Thomson.

INTREPIDITY. n. f. [intrepidité, Fr.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling.

INTREPIDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new.

INTRICACY. n. f. [from intricare.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour.

INTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Lat.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate.

His file in writing was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness.

To INTRICATE. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use.

Alterations of surnames have so intricated, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them.

INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricare.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

That variety of factions, into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse.

INTRICATENESS. n. f. [from intricare.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze.

INTRIGUE. v. n. [intrigue, French.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man,
These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow.

The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
And marriage grown a money league.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.

Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As these causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem.

To INTRIGUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs.

INTRIGUER. n. f. [intriguer, Fr. from intrigue.] One who buies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who peruses women.

I desire that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another.

INTRIGUINGLY. adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRINSECAL. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinseque, French. This word is now generally written intrinsic, contrarily to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctancy and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them.

The near and intrinsecal, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.

He falls into intrinsecal society with Sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage, and gave him rather encouragement to woo fortune in court.

Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsecal with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours.

INTRINSECALLY.

INT

INTRINSICALLY. adv. [from intrinsecus.]

1. Internally; naturally; really.
A lye is a thing absolutely and intrinsically evil. South.
Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsically and solidly valuable. Prior.
2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsically. Wotton.
If once bereaved of motion, it cannot of itself acquire it again; nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, intrinsically moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. Bentley's Sermons.

INTRINSIC. adj. [intrinsecus, Latin.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.
Intrinsic goodness consists in accordance, and fin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hammond's Fundamentals.
2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing.
The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken, is that is, a man's intrinsic; this, his current value. Grev.
His fame, like gold, the more 'tis try'd,
The more shall its intrinsic worth proclaim. Prior.
Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsic value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. Rogers's Sermons.

INTRINSICATE. adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsecus.] Perplexed; entangled.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain
Too intrinsecate to loose. Shakespeare, King Lear.

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate
Of life at once unloose. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

TO INTRODUCE. v. a. [introducere, Lat. introducere, Fr.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person.
Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. Locke.
2. To bring something into notice or practice.
This vulgar error whoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preferring by theory as well as practice. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

An author who should introduce a sort of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. Brown.

To produce; to give occasion.
Whatever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors. Locke on Education.

TO INTRODUCE. n. f. [introducere, Fr. from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person.
2. Any one who brings any thing into notice or practice.

The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Watson.

It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess hath been lately, from their example, restored among us; but whoever the introducers were, they were afterwards succeeded to a miracle. Swift.

INTRODUCTION. n. f. [introductionem, Fr. introducere, Latin.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering to any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.
2. The act of bringing any new thing into notice or practice.

The archbishop of Canterbury had pursued the introduction of the liturgy and the canons into Scotland with great vehemence. Clarendon.

The preface or part of a book containing previous matter.

INTRODUCTIVE. adj. [introducere, Fr. from introduce.]

1. Serving as the means to something else.
2. The truths of Christ crucified, is the Christian's philosophy, and a good life is the Christian's logic; that great instrumental introducere art, that must guide the mind into the former. South's Sermons.

INTRODUCTORY. adj. [from introducere, Latin.] Previous; serving as a means to something further.

This introductory discourse itself is to be but an essay, not a book. Boyle.

INTROGRESSION. n. f. [introgresio, Latin.] Entrance; the act of entering.

INTROIT. n. f. [introitus, French.] The beginning of the mass; the beginning of publick devotions.

INTROMISSION. n. f. [intromissio, Latin.]

1. The act of sending in.
2. If sight be caused by intromission, or receiving in the form of that which is seen, contrary species or forms should be received confusedly together, which Aristotle shows to be absurd. Peasam on Drawing.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sects and persuasions into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules of our church, and that therefore they should be taken away. South.

INT

2. [In the Scottish law.] The act of intermeddling with another's effects: as, he shall be brought to an account for his intromissions with such an estate.

TO INTROMIT. v. a. [intromitto, Latin.] To tend in; to let in; to admit; to allow to enter; to be the medium by which any thing enters.

Glass in the window intromits light without cold to those in the room. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Tinged bodies and liquors reflect some sorts of rays, and intromit or transmit other sorts. Newton's Opt.

TO INTROSPECT. v. a. [introspectus, Latin.] To take a view of the inside.

INTROSPECTION. n. f. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.

The adings of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discernible by man. Hale's Origin of Ideas.

I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination. Dryden.

INTROVERSION. adj. [intro and versio, Latin.] Entering; coming in.

Scarce any condition which is not exhausted and obscured, from the commixture of introversion nations, either by commerce or conquest. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO INTROUDE. v. n. [introduo, Latin.]

1. To come in uninvited by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.
2. Thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge.

And manners, to introduce where I am grac'd. Shakespeare.

The Jewish religion was yet in position; and therefore that this might follow, as not to introduce, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence. South.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship introdues on your repose, and comes thus late.

To greet you with the tidings of success, Reverend Father, Sir.

Some thoughts rise and introduce upon us, while we thus them; others fly from us, when we would hold them. Watts.

2. To encroach; to force in uncalled or unpermitted.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, introducing into those things which he hath not seen by his fleshly mind. Col. ii. 18.

TO INTROUDE. v. a. To force without right or welcome.

Not to introduce one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keeps secret, is represented by the winds that stir up in a bull hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into. Pope.

INTROUDER. n. f. [from introduce.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.

And the hounds
Should drive upon the new transformed limbs, Unmannerly intruder as thou art! Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bellow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shakespeare.

They were but intruders upon the possession, during the minority of the heir: they knew those lands were the rightful inheritance of that young lady. Davies on Ireland.

Will you, a bold intruder, never learn
To know your basket, and your bread discern? Dryden.

She had seen a great variety of faces: they were all strangers and intruders, such as she had no acquaintance with. Lake.

The whole fraternity of writers rise up in arms against every new intruder into the world of fame. Addison's Freeholder.

INTRODUCTION. n. f. [introductionem, Fr. introducere, Latin.]

1. The act of thrusting or forcing any thing or person into any place or state.
2. It must raise more substantial superstructions, and fall upon very many excellent brains, which have been justly off by the introduction of poetical fictions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The separation of the parts of one body, upon the introduction of another, and the change from rest to motion upon impulse, and the like, seem to have some connection. Lake.

2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this uncalculated introduction; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakespeare.

Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill With loath'd introduction. Milton's Paradise Lost.

How's this, my son? Why this introduction?
Were not my orders that I should be private? Addison's Cato.

I may close, after so long an introduction upon your meditations. Wake's Preparation for Death.

3. Voluntary and uncalculated undertaking of any thing.

It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and to stand charged with introduction and impertinency.

TO INTROUDE. v. a. [in and trud.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value.

Never

INV

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were introduced with the knowledge of it. Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move;
Introduce thy fortune to the powers above. Dryden's Juven.

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword
In Rome's defence, introduced to our care? Addison's Cato.

He composed his billet-doux, and at the time appointed went to introduce it to the hands of his confidant. Arbuthnot.

INTUITION. n. f. [intuitus, intuer, Latin.]

1. Sight of any thing. Used commonly of mental view; immediate knowledge.
2. The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident. Locke.

Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the causality itself is inferible. South.

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition. South.

He then single virtues did survey,
By intuition in his own large breast. Dryden.

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Latin; intuitif, French.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of reason.
2. Immediate perception of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge. Locke.

Those lofty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstract notions, those exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one and the same person. Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith, beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come. Hooker.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspokeable joy and delight, doth set them on work. Hooker.

The soul receives Discursive or intuitive. Milton.

INTUITIVELY. adv. [intuitivement, French.] Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is founded and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the teacher of all men's hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his. Hooker.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. Baker on Learning.

INTUMESCENCE. n. f. [intumescere, French; intumesco, Lat.]

With dang'rous expedition they invade
Heaven, whose high walls fear no assault. Milton.

Thy race in times to come
Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden's Zen.

INV

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy. Dryden.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main. Dryden.

2. To attack; to assail; to assault.

There shall be sedition among men, and invading one another; they shall not regard their kings. 2 Esdr. xv. 16.

Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm
Invades us to the skin; 'tis to thee;

But where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt. Shakespeare, King Lear.

3. To violate with the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend.

Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made;
And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden.

INVADE. n. f. [from invado, Latin.]

1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another.
2. The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland. Bacon.

Their piety
In sharp contest of battle found no aid Against invaders. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Were he lost, the naked empire
Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders. Denham's Sophy.

The country about Attica was the most barren of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of invaders. Swift.

Secure, by William's care, let Britain stand;
Nor dread the bold invader's hand. Prior.

Esteem and judgment with strong fancy join,
To call the fair invader in;
My darling favourite inclination, too,
All, all conspiring with the foe. Granville.

2. An assailant.

3. Encroacher; intruder.

The substance thereof was formerly comprised in that uncompounded style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders. Hammond.

INVALESCENCE. n. f. [invalesco, Latin.] Strength; health; force.

INVALID. adj. [invalidus, Fr. invalidus, Latin.] Weak; of no weight or cogency.

But this I urge,
Admitting motion in the heav'ns, to shew
Invalid, that which thee to doubt it mov'd. Milton.

TO INVALIDATE. v. a. [from invalid.] To weaken; to deprive of force or efficacy.

To invalidate such a consequence, some things might be speciously enough alleged.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted, bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of her's shall invalidate all their testimonies. Lake.

INVALID. n. f. [Fr.] One disabled by sickness or hurts.

What beggar in the invalids,
With lameness broke, with blindness smitten,
With'd ever decently to die? Prior.

INVALIDITY. n. f. [in and validity; invaliditas, French.]

1. Weakness; want of cogency.
2. Want of bodily strength. This is no English meaning.

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment.
2. We made an invasion upon the Cherethites. 1 Sa. xxx.

Q

Reason

INV

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the first entrance and admission of sin uneasy. South's Sermons.

The nations of th' Aulonian shore
Shall hear the dreadful rumour, from afar,
Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war. Dryd. En.

William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1066, which means this; that taking the duration of our Saviour's time 'till now, for one intire length of time, it shews at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes. Locke.

2. Attack of an epidemical disease.
What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. A. butbnat.

INVASIVE. adj. [from invade.] Entering hostily upon other mens possessions; not defensive.
I must come cloer to my purpose, and not make more invasive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country. Dryden.

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands,
Lessen their people, and extend their lands;
By gapping nations hated and obey'd,
Lords of the desarts that their fwords had made. Arbutnot.

INVECTIVE. n. f. [invektio, Fr. invektiva, low Lat.] A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.
Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of cleaving speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear to bitter invektives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoveful for the exercise of Christian duty. Hooker.

So desolate thieves, all hopeles of their lives,
Breathe out invektives 'gainst the officers. Shakef. H. VI.

Cast off the respect fit to be continued between kings,
Even when their blood is hottest, he fell to bitter invektives against the French king. Bacon's H. VII.

Whilt we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invektives we make at their supposed errors, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Decay of Piety.

If we take satyr, in the general signification of the world, for an invektive, 'tis certain that 'tis almost as old as verse. Dryd. Jew. Dedication.

INVECTIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.
Let him rail on; let his invektive muse
Have four and twenty letters to abuse. Dryden.

INVECTIVELY. adv. Satirically; abusively.
Thus most invektively he pierces through
The body of the country, city, court,
Yea and of this our life, swearing that we Are meer usurpers, tyrants. Shakefpeare.

TO INVEIGH. v. a. [inveho, Latin.] To utter censure or reproach.
I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

He inveighs severely against the folly of parties, in retaining scoundrels to retail their lyes. Arbutnot.

INVEIGHER. n. f. [from inveigh.] Vehement railer.
One of these inveighers against mercury, in a course of seven weeks, could not cure one small herpes in the face. Wifeman's Surgery.

TO INVEIGLE. v. a. [inveigare, Ital. inveigare, aveigler, or inveigler, French, Skinner and Justus.] To persuade to something bad or hurtful; to wheedle; to allure; to seduce.
Most false Daedalus, royal richly dight,
That ensly was to inveigle weaker fight,
Was, by her wicked arts and wily skill,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might. Pa. Queen.

Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him.
Yet have they many baits and guileful spells,
To inveigle and invite th' unwary sence
Of them that pass unweeting by the way. Milton.

Both right able
T' inveigle and draw in the rabble. Hudibras.

Those drops of pretinels, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to exalt our conceptions, not inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.

I leave the use of garlick to such as are inveigled into the gout by the use of too much drinking. Temple.

The inveigling a woman, before she is come to years of discretion, should be as criminal as the seducing of her before she is ten years old. Spektator.

INVEIGLER. n. f. [from inveigle.] Seducer; deceiver; allurer to ill.
Being presented to the emperor for his admirable beauty, the prince clapt him up as his inveigler. Sandys.

TO INVENT. v. a. [inventor, French; inventio, Latin.]

1. To discover; to find out; to excogitate; to produce something not made before.
The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, but must be received from God himself. Hooker.

By their count, which lovers books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains. Spektator.

Matter of mirth enough, though there were none
She could devise, and thousand ways invent.
To feed her foolish humour and vain jolliment. Pa. Queen.

Woe to them that invent to themselves instruments of mischief. Anst. vi. 5.

We may invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our enemies. Milton.

In the motion of the bones in their articulations, a twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction of their heads; both which make up the most apt mixture, for this use, that can be invented or thought upon. Ray.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's mazy intricacies trace,
By manag'd fire and late invented eyes. Blackmore.

But when long time the wretches thoughts reftid,
When want had let an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd.
The ship by help of a screw, invented by Archimedes, was launched into the water. Arbutnot.

2. To forge; to contrive falsely; to fabricate.
I never did such things as those men have maliciously invented against me. Sylva. Xiii.

Here is a strange figure invented, against the plain sence of the words. Stillingfleet.

3. To feign; to make by the imagination.
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in her lothsome cave.
Hercules's meeting with pleasure and virtue, was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates, and in the first drawings of philosophy. Shakefpeare.

4. To light on; to meet with.
Far off he wonders what them makes so glad:
Or Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad. Spektator.

INVENTOR. n. f. [from inventor, French.]

1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.
As a translator, he was just; as an inventor, he was rich. Garric.

2. A forger.
INVENTION. n. f. [invention, French; inventio, Latin.]

1. Fiction.
O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention! Shakef. H. V. Pro.

By improving what was writ before,
Invention labours less, but judgment more. Recommon.

Invention is a kind of muse, which, being possessed of the other advantages common to her sisters, and being warmed by the fire of Apollo, is raised higher than the rest. Dryden.

The chief excellence of Virgil is judgment, of Homer is invention. Pope.

2. Discovery.
Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are of a late invention, and called ductus salivales. Ray on the Creation.

3. Excogitation; act of producing something new.
Mine is th' invention of the charming lyes;
Sweet notes and heav'nly numbers I inspire. Dryden.

4. Forgery.
We hear our bloody cousins, not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention. Shakef. Macbeth.

If thou can'st accuse,
Do it without invention suddenly. Shakef. Henry VI.

5. The thing invented.
The garden, a place not fairer in natural ornaments than artificial inventions. Stany.

Th' invention all admitt'd; and each how he
To be th' inventor mis'd, so easy it seem'd
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible. Milton's Parad. Lost.

INVENTIVE. adj. [inventif, Fr. from invent.] Quick at contrivance; ready at expedients; having the power of fiction.
Those have the inventive heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters. Johnson's Schoolmaster.

As he had an inventive brain, so there never lived any man that believed better thereof, and of himself. Raleigh.

Reason, remembrance, wit, inventive art,
No nature, but immortal, can impart. Denham.

That inventive head
Her fatal image from the temple drew,
The sleeping guardians of the castle flew.
The inventive god, who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart. Dryden.

INVENTOR.

INV

INVENTOR. n. f. [inventor, Latin.]

1. A finder out of something new.
We have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies, also the inventor of ships: your Monk, that was the inventor of ordnance, and of gunpowder. Bacon.

Studious they appear
Of arts that polish life; inventors rare, Unmindful of their maker. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Th' invention all admitt'd, and each how he
To be the inventor mis'd.
Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author and inventor, and the reader led into a belief that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterb.

2. A contriver; a forger.
In this upshot, purposes mistook, Fall'n on th' inventor heads. Shakef. Hamlet.

INVENTORIALY. adv. [from inventor, whence perhaps inventorial.] In manner of an inventor.
To divide inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetick of memory. Shakefpeare's Hamlet.

INVENTORY. n. f. [inventaire, French; inventarium, Latin.] An account or catalogue of moveables.
I found,
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing. Shakef. H. VIII.

The several parcels of his plate.
The leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance: our sufferings is a gain to them who have no grief. Shakefpeare's Coriolanus.

Whoe'er looks
For themselves dare not go, o'er Cheapside books, Shall find their wardrobe's inventory. Donne.

It were of much consequence to have such an inventory of nature, wherein, as on the one hand, nothing should be wanting, so nothing repeated on the other. Grew's Museum.

In Persia the daughters of Eve are reckoned in the inventory of their goods and chattels; and it is usual, when a man sells a bale of silk, to tols half a dozen women into the bargain. Spektator.

He gave me an inventory of her goods and estate. Spektator.

TO INVENTORY. v. a. [inventari, Fr.] To register; to place in a catalogue.
I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and useful label'd to my will. Shakef. Twelfth Night.

A man looks on the love of his friend as one of the richest possessions: the philosopher thought friends were to be inventoried as well as goods. Gov. of the Tongue.

INVENTRESS. n. f. [inventrice, Fr. from inventor.] A female that invents.
The arts, with all their retinue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were deified. Burnet.

Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet and soulful, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds. Dryden.

INVERSE. adj. [inversus, Fr. inversus, Latin.] Inverted; reciprocal: opposed to direct. It is so called in proportion, when the fourth term is so much greater than the third, as the second is less than the first; or so much less than the third as the second is greater than the first.
Every part of matter tends to every part of matter with a force, which is always in a direct proportion of the quantity of matter, and an inverse duplicate proportion of the distance. Garth.

INVERSION. n. f. [inversion, Fr. inversio, Latin.]

1. Change of order or time, so as that the last is first, and first last.
If he speaks truth, it is upon design, and a subtle inversion of the precept of God, to do good that evil may come of it. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

'Tis just the inversion of an act of parliament; your lordship first signed it, and then it was passed amongst the lords and commons. Dryden.

2. Change of place, so as that each takes the room of the other.
TO INVERT. v. a. [invertio, Latin.]

1. To turn upside down; to place in contrary method or order to that which was before.

And some proud prince, in wild Numidia born,
Pray to accept me, and forget my scorn? Waller.

So long delays her flow is to bear,
And Winter storms invert the year.
Poetry and oratory omit things essential, and invert times and actions, to place every thing in the most affecting light. Watts.

2. To place the last first.
Yes, every poet is a fool;
By demonstration Ned can show it:
Happy, could Ned's inverted rule
Prove every fool to be a poet. Prior.

3. To divert; to turn into another channel; to imbezelize. Instead of this invert or invert is now commonly used.

INV

Solyman charged him bitterly with inverting his treasures to his own private use, and having secret intelligence with his enemies. Knapler's History of the Turks.

INVERTEDLY. adv. [from inverted.] In contrary or reversed order.
Placing the forefront of the eye to the hole of the window of a darkened room, we have a pretty landkip of the objects abroad, invertedly painted on the paper, on the back of the eye. Derham's Physico-Theology.

TO INVEST. v. a. [investir, Fr. investire, Latin.]

1. To dress; to clothe; to array. When it has two accusatives it has in or with before the thing.
Their gesture sad,
Invest in lank lean cheeks and war-worn coats,
Presented them unto the gazing moon,
So many horrid ghosts. Shakef. Henry V.

Thou with a mantle didst invest
The rising world of waters. Milton.

Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre;
Invest them with thy love's smiles, put on Thy choicest looks. Denham's Sephy.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.
When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make places of publick revery, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.

After the death of the other archbishop he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth. Clarend.

The practice of all ages, and all countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with publick authority. Atterb.

3. To adorn; to grace.
Honour must,
Not accompanied, invest him only;
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deservers. Shakefpeare's Macbeth.

The foolish, over-careful fathers for this engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shakefpeare.

Some great potentate,
Or of the thrones above; such majesty Invest him coming. Milt. Parad. Lost.

4. To confer; to give.
If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it invests a right of government. Bacon.

5. To inclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions: as, the enemy invested the town.

INVESTIENT. adj. [investiens, Latin.] Covering; clothing.

INVESTIGATION. n. f. [investigation, Fr. investigatio, Latin.]

1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.
Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synthetick or analytick. Watts.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought Investigation calm, whose silent powers Command the world. Thomson's Summer.

2. Examination.
Your travels I hear much of: my own shall never more be in a strange land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories: I mean no more translations, but something domestick, fit for my own country. Pope to Swift.

INVESTITURE. n. f. [French.]

1. The right of giving possession of any manor, office, or benefice.
He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishops, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Raleigh's Essays.

2. The act of giving possession.
INVESTMENT. n. f. [in and vestment.] Dress; cloaths; garment; habit.
Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,
Not of that die which their investments throw. Shakef. Ham.

You,

INV

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose fee is by a civil peace maintained,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war? Shak. H. IV.

INVE'TERACY, n. f. [inveteratus, Latin.]
1. Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

The inveteracy of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them. Addison.

INVE'TERATE, adj. [inveteratus, Latin.]

1. Old; long established.
The custom of Christians was then, and had been a long time, not to wear garlands, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing; the very inveterate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bind all men to observe it, unless they could show some higher law, some law of Scripture, to the contrary. Hooker.

It is an inveterate and received opinion, that cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and exacerate it. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Obstinate by long continuance.

It is not every sinful violation of conscience that can quench the spirit; but it must be a long inveterate course and custom of sinning, that at length produces and ends in such a cursed effect. South's Sermon.

He who writes satire honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease. Dryden.

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let abuses grow inveterate, or multiply to far that it will be hard to find remedies. Swift.

TO INVE'TERATE, v. a. [invetero, Fr. invetero, Latin.] To harden or make obstinate by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophecies, and to an ancient tacit expectation, which had by tradition been infused and inveterated into mens minds. Bacon.

Let not atheists lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and inveterated habit. Bentley's Sermons.

INVE'TERATENESS, n. f. [inveteratus, Latin.] Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

As time hath rendered him more perfect in the art, so hath the inveterateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Neither the inveterateness of the mischief, nor the prevalence of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words. Locke.

INVETERATION, n. f. [inveteratio, Latin.] The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVIDIOUS, adj. [invidiosus, Latin.]

1. Envious; malignant.

I shall open to them the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve. Evlyn.

2. Likely to incur or to bring hatred. This is the more usual sense.

INVOLABLE, adj. [involabilis, French; involabilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured.

Thou, be sure, shalt give account
To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep This place involable, and these from harm. Milt. Par. Lost.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade the involable main;
Th' eternal fencings overlap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Ye lamps of heav'n! he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free; 'thou venerable sky!
Involable powers! adon'd with dread,
Be all of you adjur'd. Dryden's Zen.

This bright, when our author pleases, must and must not be sacred and involable. Locke.

Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds, till involution rise Above the highest hills. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

This involution upon the Egyptians happeneth when it is winter upon the Ethiopians. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threatening floods, and involution near.
The hero next assail'd proud Dowry's head,
And spite of confluent involution spread
With unexampled valour did succeed. Blackmore.

INU

'Tis wonderful,
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To loyalty unlearn'd, honour untaught, Civility not seen from others. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

To us invisible, or dimly seen,
In these thy lowest works. Milton.

He that believes a God, believes such a being as hath all perfections; among which this is one, that he is a spirit, and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen. Tillotson.

It seems easier to make one's self invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts visible to me, which are not visible to himself. Locke.

INVISIBLY, adv. [invisible, Latin.] Imperceptibly to the sight.

Age by degrees invisibly doth creep,
Nor do we seem to die, but fall asleep. Denham.

TO INVISCATE, v. a. [in viscus, Latin.] To lime; to intangle in glutinous matter.

The camelion's food being flies, it hath in the tongue a

TO INWRAP. v. a. [in and wrap.]
1. To cover by involution; to involve.
And over them Arachne high did lift
Her cunning web, and spread her subtil net,
Inwoven in foul smokes. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
This, as an amber drop, inwraps a bee,
Covering discovers your quick soul; that we May in your through-flime front our hearts thoughts see. Dante.
2. To perplex; to puzzle with difficulty or obscurity.
The case is no sooner made than resolv'd: if it be made not inwoven, but plainly and perspicuously. Bacon.
3. It is doubtful whether the following examples should not be wrap or inwrap, from in and rap, Latin, to ravish or transport.
This pearl the gave me I do feel't and feel't;
And though 'tis wonder that inwraps me thus,
Yet 'tis not madnes. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
For if such holy long
Enwrap our fancy long,
Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold. Milton.
INWROUGHT. adj. [in and wrought.] Adorned with work. Camus.

JOE

- Canus, reverend sir, went footing slow;
His mantle hairy and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that fanguine flower inscrib'd with woe. Milton.
TO INWREATH. v. a. [in and wreath.] To surround as with a wreath.
Bind their resplendent locks inwreath'd with beams. Milton.
Nor less the palm of peace inwreathes thy brow. Thomson.
JOB. n. f. [A low word now much in use, of which I cannot tell the etymology.]
1. A low mean lucrative busy affair.
2. Petty, piddling work; a piece of chance work.
He was now with his old friends in the state of a poor disbanded officer after peace, like an old favourite of a cunning minister after the job is over. Arbutnot.
No cheek is known to blush, no heart to throb,
Save when they lose a question, or a job. Pope.
Such patents as these never were granted with a view of being a job, for the interest of a particular person to the damage of the publick. Swift.
3. A sudden stab with a sharp instrument.
TO JOB. v. a.

The roofs with joy resound;
And hymen, is hymen, rung around. Dryden.

3. Happiness; felicity.
My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish. Shakespeare.
Come, love and health to all;
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine.
I drink to the general joy of the whole table. Shakespeare.

JOY

Almeyda smiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conquest. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

The bride,
Lovely herself, and lovely by her side,
A bevy of bright nymphs, with sober grace,
Came glitt'ring like a star, and took her place:
Her heavenly form beheld, all with'd her joy;
And little wanted, but in vain, their wishes all employ. Dryden.

4. A term of fondness.
Now our joy,
Although our last, yet not our least young love,
What say you? Shakespeare's King Lear.
To JOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy, when glad occasion fits,
And mask in mirth like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy to sorrow flits,
I will make my woes a tragedy. Spenser.

I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakespeare's H. VI.
He will joy over thee with fingering. Zeph. iii. 17.
I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation. Heb. iii. 18.

Exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit was refreshed by you. 2 Cor. vii. 13.
They laugh, we weep; they joy while we lament. Fairfax.
No man imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joins the more; and no man imparteth his griefs, but he grieveth the less. Bacon's Essays.

Well then, my soul, joy in the midst of pain;
Thy Christ, that conquer'd hell, shall from above
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own justice with his love. Wotton.

Joy thou,
In what he gives to thee this paradise,
And thy fair Eve. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.
Their cheerful age with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleasure's slavery they are free. Denham.

To JOY. v. a.
1. To congratulate; to entertain kindly.
Like us they love or hate; like us they know
To joy the friend, or grapple with the foe. Prior.

2. To gladden; to exhilarate.
She went to Pamela, meaning to delight her eyes and joy her thoughts with the conversation of her beloved sister. Sidney.
My soul was joy'd in vain;

3. [Jouis de, French.] To enjoy; to have happy possession.
Let us hence
And let her joy her raven-colour'd love. Shakespeare's Tit. Andr.
I might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliss,
Yet willingly chose rather death with thee. Milton.

Th' usurper joy'd not long
His ill-got crown. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
JOYANCE. n. f. [joiant, old French.] Gaiety; festivity.
Bring home with you the glory of her gain;
With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenser.

There him rests in riotous suffiance,
Of all his gladfulness and kingly joyance. Spenser.
JOYFUL. adj. [joy and full.]
1. Full of joy; glad; exulting.
They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings viii. 66.

My soul shall be joyful in my God.
2. Sometimes it has of before the cause of joy.
Six brave companions from each ship we lost:
With sails outspread we fly th' unequal strife,
Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life. Pope's Odyssey.

JOYFULLY. adv. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.
If we no more meet 'till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinsmen, warriors all, adieu. Shakespeare's H. V.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to flee:
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if to praise them all the states stood by. Dryden.

The good Christian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Wake.

JOYFULNESS. n. f. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.
Thou servest not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things. Deut.

JOYLESS. adj. [from joy.]
1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.
A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyless. Shakespeare's R. III.

With

IRE

With down-cast eyes the joyless victor sat;
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below;
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden's Alexander's Feast.

2. It has sometimes of before the object.
With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest:
Forakes his food, and pining for the lass,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing grass. Dryden.

3. Giving no pleasure.
A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad. Shakespeare's Tit. Andr.
Here love his golden shafts employs; here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd, Casual fruition. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade this their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it furely would be a very joyless possession. Decay of Piety.
He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him. Addison.

JOYOUS. adj. [joyeux, French.]
1. Glad; gay; merry.
Most joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did shew his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my father friend did no less joyous deem. Pope's Queen.

Joyous the birds; fresh gases and gentle airs Whisper'd it. Milton.
Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beats, by nature stung, renew their love.
Fast by her flow'ry bank the fons of Arcas, Fav'rites of heav'n, with happy care protect Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave. Prior.

2. Giving joy.
They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dancing round. F. Queen.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.
Round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grieve our happy end, and wish it theirs. Dryden.

IRECACA'NHA. n. f. [An Indian plant.]
Irecacanha is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, which is brought from Peru: the other sort is a smaller root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown, or blackish colour on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brasils.

The grey ought to be preferred in medicinal use, because the brown, being stronger, is apt to operate more roughly. Ire- cacanha was in the middle of the last century first brought into Europe, and became celebrated for the cure of dysenteries, a virtue discovered in it by the Indians; but after a few years it sunk into oblivion, being given in two large doses.

IRA'SCIBLE. adj. [irascibilis, low Latin; irascible, French.]
Partaking of the nature of anger.
The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the concupiscible distractions the crafts of the liver. Brown.
I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet. Arbutnot on Aliments.

We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties. Digby to Pope.
IRE. n. f. [Fr. ire, Latin.] Anger; rage; passionate hatred.

She lik'd not his desires;
Fain would be free, but dreaded parents ire. Sidney.
If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not flake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shak. H. VI.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son. Milton's Par. Lost.
The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only just object of his ire. Milton's Par. Lost.

For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
Thus will perfit, relentless in his ire,
'Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire. Dryden.

IREFUL. adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.
The ireful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon encounter'd. Shakespeare's H. VI.
By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guile. Fairfax.
In midst of all the dome misfortune sate,
And gloomy discontent and fell debate,
And madnels laughing in his ireful mood. Dryden.

IREFULLY. adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

IRIS. n. f. [Latin.]
1. The rainbow.
Beside the solary iris, which God shewed unto Noah, there is another lunary, whose efficient is the moon. Brown.

2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.
When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breadth of the interior iris 2 gr. 10'; and the breadth of the red, yellow, and green in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton's Opt.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.
4. The flower-de-luce.
Iris all hues, roses and jessamine. Milton.

To IRK. v. a. [irk, work, islandick.] This word is used only imperfonally, it irks me; mibi pœna est, it gives me pain; or,
I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the Accidence say, tudet, it irket.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakespeare's H. VI.

IRKSOME. adj. [from irk.] Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; toilsome; tiresome; unpleasing.
I know he is an irksome brawling scold. Shakespeare.
Since that thou can't talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure. Shak. As you like it.

Where he may likeliest find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours, 'till his great chief return. Milton.
For not to irksome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reason join'd. Milton.

There is nothing to irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words. Addison's Spectator.
Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body. Swift.

IRKSOMELY. adv. [from irksome.] Wearisomely; tediously.
IRKSOMENESS. n. f. [from irksome.] Tediousness; wearisomeness.

IRON. n. f. [Idaarn, Welsh; irren, ipen, Saxon; iron, Euse.]
1. A metal common to all parts of the world, plentiful in most, and of a small price, though superior in real value to the dearest. Though the lightest of all metals, except tin, it is considerably the hardest; and, when pure, naturally malleable, but in a less degree than gold, silver, lead, or copper: when wrought into steel, or when in the impure state from its first fusion, in which it is called cast iron, it is scarce malleable; and the most ductile iron, heated and suddenly quenched in cold water, loses much of this quality. Iron is more capable of rust than any other metal, is very sonorous, and requires the strongest fire of all the metals to melt it, and is with difficulty amalgamated with mercury. Most of the other metals are brittle, while they are hot; but this is most malleable as it approaches nearest to fusion. It consists of a vitriolick salt, a vitrifiable earth, and a peculiar bituminous matter. The specific gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 10000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone.
Iron is not only soluble in all the stronger acids, but even in common water. Pure iron has been found in some places but very rarely. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals. Hill.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakespeare's Jul. Cas.
If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer. Numb. xxxv. 16.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a load-stone, and a power to be so drawn is a part of that of iron.
In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates, placed parallel to each other. Woodward.
There are incredible quantities of iron slag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Woodward on Fossils.
Iron stone lies in strata.
I treated of making iron work, and steel work in general.

2. Any instrument or utensil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron.
Iron of a dole, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising iron of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries. Shak. R. III.

His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in irons. Pf.
Can't thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fish-spears? Jeb xli. 7.

For this your locks in paper-durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.
The iron entered into his soul. Psalms. Common Prayer.

IRON.

1. Made of iron.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure. Shaksp. H. VI.
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight Unto my cell. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.

Some are of an iron red, shining, and polite; others not polite, but as if powdered with iron dust. Woodward.

Hall-cats and wheels do a great deal of injury to warrens:
the way of taking them is in hutches, and iron traps. Mortim.

2. Resembling iron in colour.

A piece of stone of a dark iron grey colour, but in some parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodward on Fossils.

Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright. Woodw.

3. Harsh; severe; rigid; miserable; calamitous: as, the iron age, for an age of hardship and wickedness. These ideas may be found more or less in all the following examples.

Three vigorous virgins, waiting still behind,
Assist the throne of th' iron scepter'd king. Crashaw.

O ad virgin, that thy power
Might bid the soul of Orpheus sing
Such notes as warbled to the strings,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did seek. Milton.

In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth down to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a stain of dishonour. Rowe.

Jove crush the nations with an iron rod,
And ev'ry monarch be the scourge of God. Pope's Odyssey.

4. Indissoluble, unbroken.

Raffi Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his fureit by irrisuous sleep,
Imprudent: him death's iron sleep oppress. Phillips.

5. Hard; impenetrable.

I will converse with iron witted fools,
And unresponsive boys: none are for me,
That look into me with confid'rate eyes. Shaksp. R. III.

6. To smooth with an iron.

7. To shackle with irons.

IRONICAL. adj. [from ironia, Fr. from irony] Expressing one thing and meaning another; speaking by contraries.

In this fallacy may be comprised all ironical mistakes, or expressions receiving inverted significations. Brown.

I take all your ironical civilities in a literal sense, and shall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.

IRONICALLY. adv. [from ironia] By the use of irony.

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wisest man of Greece, which he would turn from himself ironically, saying, there could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wise, and knew it; and others were not wise, and knew it not. Bacon.

The dean, ironically grave,

Still shunn'd the fool, and lash'd the knave. Swift.

IRONMONGER. n. s. [from iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.

IRONWOOD. n. s. A kind of wood extremely hard, and so ponderous as to sink in water. It grows in America. Rob. Cruso.

IRONWORT. n. s. [from iron and wort, Latin.] It is a plant with a labiate flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip or beard is divided into three parts: out of the flower-cup rises the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryos; which afterward turn to so many oblong seeds, shut up in an hulk, which before was the flower-cup: to these marks must be added, the flowers growing in whorles at the wings of the leaves, which are cut like a crest, and differ from the other leaves of the plant. Mill.

IRONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary: it is not strange if the irony chains have more solidity than the contemplative. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of one metal, suppose iron, put into the spring; and deposit, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, coppery particles. Woodward on Fossils.

IRONY. n. s. [from ironia, Fr. ironia.] A mode of speech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.

So grave a body, upon so solemn an occasion, should not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.

IRRADIANCE. n. s. [from irradiare, French; irradiare, Latin.]

1. Emission of rays or beams of light upon any object.

The principal affection is its translucency; the irradiance and sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Beams of light emitted.

Love not the heavenly spirits? Or do they mix irradiance of virtual, or immediate touch? Mit. Par. Leg.

3. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffusion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light. Digby on Bodies.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South.

4. To enlighten intellectually; to illumine; to illuminate.

Celestial light
Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers irradiate; there plant eyes: all mist from thence Purge and dispel. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

5. To animate by heat or light.

Ethereal or solar heat must digest, influence, irradiate, and put those more simple parts of matter into motion. Hale.

6. To decorate with shining ornaments.

No weeping orphan saw his father's floor
Our shrines irradiate, or imbrize the floor. Pope.

IRRADIATION. n. s. [from irradiare, Fr. from irradiare.]

1. The act of emitting beams of light.

If light were a body it should drive away the air, which is likewise a body, wherever it is admitted; for within the visible sphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found. Digby on Bodies.

2. The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or answerably unto the propagation of light; but herein a transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Illumination; intellectual light.

The means of derivation and immediate union of these intelligible objects to the understanding, are sometimes divine and supernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation.

The means of derivation and immediate union of these intelligible objects to the understanding, are sometimes divine
and supernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation.

4. Irradiation; intellectual light.

IRRATIONAL. adj. [from irrationalis, Latin.]

1. Void of reason; void of understanding; without the discursive faculty.

Thus began
Outrage from lifeless things; but discord first,
Daughter of sin, among th' irrational
Death introduced. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He hath eat'n, and lives,
And knows, and speaks, and reasons and discerns;
Irrational till then. Mit. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

2. Absurd; contrary to reason.

Since the brain is only a part transmittent, and that humours are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive to the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from irrational an application. Harvey on Conjunction.

I shall quietly submit, not wishing to irrational a thing as that every body should be deceived. Pope.

IRRATIONALITY. n. s. [from irrational.] Want of reason.

IRRATIONALLY. adv. [from irrational.] Without reason;
absurdly.

IRRECLAIMABLE. adj. [in and reclaimable.] Not to be reclaimed; not to be changed to the better.

As for obstinate, irreclaimable, professed enemies, we must expect their calamities will continue. Addison's Probator.

IRRECONCILABLE. adj. [from irreconcilable, Fr. in and reconcilable.]

1. Not to be reconciled; not to be appeased.

Wage eternal wars,
Irreconcilable to our grand foe. Milton.

A weak unequal faction may animate a government; but when it grows equal in strength, and irreconcilable by animosity, it cannot end without some crisis. Temple.

There are no factions, though irreconcilable to one another, that are not united in their affection to you. Dryden.

2. Not to be made consistent. It has with or to.

As she was strictly virtuous herself, so she always put the best construction upon the words and actions of her neighbours, except where they were irreconcilable to the rules of honesty and decency. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

Since the sense I oppose is attended with such gross irreconcilable absurdities, I presume I need not offer any thing farther in support of the one, or in disproof of the other. Rogers.

This essential power of gravitation or attraction is irreconcilable with the atheist's own doctrine of a chaos. Beattie.

All that can be transmitted from the stars is wholly unac-countable, and irreconcilable to any system of science. Beattie.

IRRECONCILABLENESS. n. s. [from irreconcilable.] Impossibility to be reconciled.

IRRECONCILABLY. adv. [from irreconcilable.] In a manner not admitting reconciliation.

IRRECONCILED. adj. [in and reconciled.] Not atoned.

A fervant dies in many irreconciled iniquities. Shaksp. H. V.

IRRECOVERABLE. adj. [in and recoverable.]

1. Not to be regained; not to be restored or repaired.

Time, in a natural sense, is irrecoverable: the moment just fled by us, it is impossible to recall. Rogers.

2. Not to be remedied.

The irrecoverable loss of so many livings of principal value. Haber.

It concerns every man, that would not trifle away his soul and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire. Tillotson's Sermons.

IRRECOVERABLY.

IRR

IRRECOVERABLY. adv. [from irrecoverable.] Beyond recovery; past repair.

O dark, dark, dark amid the blaze of noon;
Irrecoverably dark, total eclipse,
Without all hope of day. Milton's Agonistes.

The credit of the Exchequer is irrecoverably lost by the last breach with the bankers. Temple.

IRREDUCIBLE. adj. [in and reducible.] Not to be brought or reduced.

These observations seem to argue the corpuscles of air to be irreducible into water. Boyle.

IRREFRAGABILITY. n. s. [from irrefragabile.] Strength of argument not to be refuted.

IRREFRAGABLE. adj. [from irrefragabilis, school Latin; irrefragabile, Fr.] Not to be confuted; superior to argumental opposition.

Strong and irrefragable the evidences of Christianity must be: they who resisted them would resist every thing. Atterbury.

The danger of introducing unexperienced men was arged as an irrefragable reason for working by flow degrees. Swift.

IRREFRAGABLY. adv. [from irrefragabile.] With force above confutation.

That they denied a future state is evident from St. Paul's reasonings, which are of no force but only on that supposition, as Origen largely and irrefragably proves. Atterbury.

IRREFRAGABLE. adj. [from irrefragabilis, Latin.] Not to be overthrown by argument.

IRREGULAR. adj. [from irregularis, Latin.]

1. Deviating from rule, custom, or nature.

The am'rous youth
Obtain'd of Venus his desire,
How'er irregular his fire. Prior.

2. Immethodical; not confined to any certain rule or order.

This motion seems excentric and irregular, yet not well to be refuted or quieted. King Charles.

Regular

Then most, when most irregular they seem. Milton.

The numbers of pindarics are wild and irregular, and sometimes seem harsh and uncouth. Cowley.

3. Not being according to the laws of virtue. A soft word for vicious.

IRREGULARITY. n. s. [from irregularis, Fr. from irregular.]

1. Deviation from rule.

2. Neglect of method and order.

This irregularity of its unruly and tumultuous motion might afford a beginning unto the common opinion. Brown.

As these vast heaps of mountains are thrown together with so much irregularity and confusion, they form a great variety of hollow bottoms. Addison on Italy.

3. Inordinate practice.

Religion is somewhat less in danger of corruption, while the sinner acknowledges the obligations of his duty, and is ashamed of his irregularities. Rogers's Sermons.

IRREGULARLY. adv. [from irregular.] Without observation of rule or method.

Phaeton,
By the wild courses of his fancy drawn,
From East to West irregularly hurld,
First set on fire himself, and then the world. Dryden jun.

Your's is a soul irregularly great,
Which wanting temper, yet abounds with heat. Dryden.

It may give some light to those whole concern for their little ones makes them to irregularly bold as to consult their own reason, in the education of their children, rather than to rely upon old custom. Locke.

TO IRREGULATE. v. a. [from in and regula, Latin.] To make irregular; to disorder.

Its fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, shelves, and every interagency irregulate. Brown's Vulg. Err.

IRRELATIVE. adj. [in and relativus, Latin.] Having no reference to any thing; single; unconnected.

Separated by the voice of God, things in their species came out in uncommunicated varieties, and irrelative femininities.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IRRELIGION. n. s. [from irreligionis, Fr. in and religion.] Contempt of religion; impiety.

The weapons with which I combat irreligion are already consecrated. Dryden.

We behold every instance of prophaneity and irreligion, not only committed, but defended and gloried in. Rogers.

IRRELIGIOUS. adj. [from irreligionis, Fr. in and religionis.]

1. Contemning religion; impious.

The issue of an irreligious Moor. Shaksp. Tit. Andron.

Whoever sees these irreligious men,
With burthen of a sickness weak and faint,
But hears them talking of religion then,
And vowing of their souls to ev'ry saint. Davies.

Shame and reproach is generally the portion of the impious and irreligious. South's Sermons.

2. Contrary to religion.

Wherein that Scripture standeth not the church of God in any stead, or serveth nothing at all to direct, but may be let

IRR

pals as needfuls to be consulted with, we judge it profane, impious, and irreligious to think. H. cher.

Might not the queen's domesticks be obliged to avoid swearing, and irreligious profane discourse? Swift.

IRRELIGIOUSLY. adv. [from irreligious.] With impiety; with irreligion.

IRREMEABLE. adj. [from irremediabilis, Latin.] Admitting no return.

The keeper charm'd, the chief without delay
Pals'd on, and took th' irremediabile way. Dryden.

IRREME'DIABLE. adj. [from irremediabile, Fr. in and remediabile.]

Admitting no cure; not to be remedied.

They content themselves with that which was the irremediabile error of former times, or the necessity of the present hath call'd upon them. Hooker.

A steady hand, in governing of military affairs, is more requisite than in times of peace, because an error committed in war may prove irremediabile. Bacon.

Whatever he consults you about, unless it lead to some fatal and irremediabile mischief, be sure you advise only as a friend. Locke.

IRREME'DIABLY. adv. [from irremediabile.] Without cure.

It happens to us irremediably and inevitably, that we may perceive these accidents are not the fruits of our labour, but gifts of God. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

IRREMISSEBLE. adj. [in and remisite, Lat. irremissibile, French.]
Not to be pardoned.

IRREMISSEBLENESS. n. s. [from irremissibile.] The quality of being not to be pardoned.

Thence arises the aggravation and irremissibleness of the sin. Hammond on Fundamentals.

IRREMOVABLE. adj. [in and remove.] Not to be moved;
not to be changed.

Refolv'd for flight, Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

IRRENOVABLE. adj. [in and renovo.] Void of honour.

For all he did was to deceive good knights,
And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame
To sluggish sloth and sensual delights,
And end their days with irrenovated shame. Fairy Queen.

IRREPARABLE. adj. [from irreparabilis, Lat. irreparable, Fr.] Not to be recovered; not to be repaired.

Irreparable is the loss, and patience says it is not past her cure. Shaksp. Tempest.

IRR

IRRESISTIBLY, adv. [from irresistible.] In a manner not to be opposed.

God irresistibly sways all manner of events on earth. Dryden.
Fond of pleasing and endearing ourselves to those we esteem, we are irresistibly led into the same inclinations and aversions with them.

IRRESISTIBLE, adj. [A barbarous ungrammatical conjunction of two negatives.] Irresistible; resistless.

Those radiant eyes, whose irresistible flame
Strikes envy dumb, and keeps sedition tame,
They can to gazing multitudes give law,
Convert the factions, and the rebel awe.

IRRESOLUBLE, adj. [in and resolubilis, Latin.] Not to be broken; not to be dissolved.

In factitious fal armoniac the common and urinous salts are so well mingled, that both in the open fire and in subliming vessels they rise together as one salt, which seems in such vessels irresoluble by fire alone.

IRRESOLUBLENESS, n. f. [from irresoluble.] Resistance to separation of the parts.

Quercetanus has this confession of the irresolubleness of diamonds.

IRRESOLVEDLY, adv. [in and resolued.] Without settled determination.

Divers of my friends have thought it strange to hear me speak so irresolvably concerning those things, which some take to be the elements, and others the principles of all mixed bodies.

IRRESOLUTE, adj. [from irresolute, Fr. in and resolute.] Not constant in purpose; not determined.

Were he evil us'd, he would outgo
His father, by as much as a performance
Does an irresolute purpose.

His father, by as much as a performance
Does an irresolute purpose.

Of thoughts revol'd, his final sentence chose Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom
To enter.

To make reflections upon what is past, is the part of ingenious but irresolute men.

So Myrrha's mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide;
Irresolute on which she should rely,
At last unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die.

IRRESOLUTELY, adv. [from irresolute.] Without firmness of mind; without determined purpose.

IRRESOLUTION, n. f. [from irresolute, Fr. in and resolution.] Want of firmness of mind.

It hath most force upon things that have the lightest motion, and therefore upon the spirits of men, and in them upon such affections as move lightest; as upon men in fear, or men in irresolution.

Irresolution on the schemes of life, which offer themselves to our choice, and inconstancy in pursuing them, are the greatest causes of all our unhappiness.

IRRESPECTIVE, adj. [in and respective.] Having no regard to any circumstances.

Thus did the Jew, by persuading himself of his particular irrespective election, think it safe to run into all foul sins.

According to this doctrine, it must be resolved wholly into the absolute irrespective will of God.

IRRESPECTIVELY, adv. [from irrespective.] Without regard to circumstances.

He is convinced, that all the promises belong to him absolutely and irrespectively.

IRRETRIEVABLE, adj. [in and retrieve.] Not to be repaired;
irrecoverable; irreparable.

IRRETRIEVABLY, adv. [from irretrievable.] Irreparably; irrecoverably.

It would not defray the charge of the extraction, and therefore must have been all irretrievably lost, and useless to mankind, was it not by this means collected.

IRREVERENCE, n. f. [from irreverentia, Lat. irreverence, Fr. in and reverence.]

1. Want of reverence; want of veneration; want of respect.
Having seen our scandalous irreverence towards God's worship in general, 'tis easy to make application to the several parts of it.

They were a sort of attributes, with which it was a matter of religion to salute them on all occasions, and which it was an irreverence to omit.

2. State of being disregarded.

The concurrence of the house of peers in that fury, can be imputed to no one thing more than to the irreverence and scorn the judges were justly in, who had been always looked upon there as the oracles of the law.

IRREVERENT, adj. [from irreverent, Fr. in and reverent.] Not paying due homage or reverence; not expressing or conceiving due veneration or respect.

As our fear excludeth not that boldness which becometh saints, so, if our familiarity with God do not favour of fear,

IRR

it draweth too near that irreverent confidence wherewith true humility can never stand.

Knowledge men sought for, and covered it from the vulgar sort as jewels of ineffable price, fearing the irreverent construction of the ignorant and irreligious.

Witness the irreverent son
Of him who built the ark; who, for the shame
Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,

Servant of servants, on his vicious race.

Sweating, and the irreverent using the name of God in common discourse, is another abuse of the tongue.

If an irreverent expression or thought too wanton are crept into my verses, through my inadvertency, let their authors be answerable for them.

IRREVERENTLY, adv. [from irreverent.] Without due respect or veneration.

'Tis but an ill essay of reverence and godly fear to use the gospel irreverently.

IRREVERSIBLE, adj. [in and reversis.] Not to be recalled; not to be changed.

The sins of his chamber and his closet shall be produced before men and angels, and an eternal irreversible sentence be pronounced.

IRREVERSIBLY, adv. [from irreversible.] Without change.

The title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church, at which so many myriads of solidarians have flumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions.

IRREVOCABLE, adj. [from irrevocabilis, Latin; irrevocable, French.]
Not to be recalled; not to be brought back; not to be reversed.

Give thy hand to Warwick,
And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,
That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine.

Firm and irrevocable is my doom,
Which I have past upon her.

That which is past is gone and irrevocable, therefore they do but trifle that labour in past matters.

The second, both for piety renown'd,
And pious deeds, a promise shall receive Irrevocable, that his regal throne
For ever shall endure.

By her irrevocable fate,
War shall the country waste and change the state.

The other victor flame a moment flood,
Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood;
For ever lost, th' irrevocable light
Forsook the black'ning coals, and sunk to night.

Each sacred accent bears eternal weight,
And each irrevocable word is fate.

IRREVOCABLY, adv. [from irrevocable.] Without recall.

If air were kept out four or five minutes, the fire would be irrevocably extinguished.

TO IRRIGATE, v. a. [from irrigo, Latin.] To wet; to moisten;
to water.

The heart, which is one of the principal parts of the body, doth continually irrigate, nourish, keep hot, and supple all the members.

A bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues.

IRRIGATION, n. f. [from irrigate.] The act of watering or moistening.

Help of ground is by watering and irrigation.

IRRIGUOUS, adj. [from irrigate.]

1. Watery; watered.

The flow'ry lap
Of some irriguous valley spreads her store.

2. Dewy; moist. Phillips seems to have mistaken the Latin phrase irriguus for imprudens.

Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhaled his fureit by irriguous sleep:

Imprudent! him death's iron sleep oppress'd.

IRRISION, n. f. [from irrisio, Latin; irrision, French.] The act of laughing at another.

This person, by his indelicate and unnatural irrision, and exposing of his father, incurs his indignation and curse.

TO IRRITATE, v. a. [from irrito, Latin; irriter, French.]
1. To provoke; to tease; to exasperate.

The earl, speaking to the freeholders in imperious language, did not irritate the people.

His power at court could not qualify him to go through with that difficult reformation, whilst he had a superior in the church, who, having the reins in his hand, could slacken them according to his own humour and indiction, and was thought to be the more remiss to irritate his choleric disposition.

ISI

2. To fret; to put into motion or disorder by any irregular or unaccustomed contact; to stimulate; to vellicate.

Cold maketh the spirits vigorous, and irritate them.

3. To heighten; to agitate; to enforce.

Air, if very cold, irritate the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorseth in frosty weather.

When they are collected, the heat becometh more violent and irritate, and thereby expelleth heat.

By dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring.

IRRITATION, n. f. [from irritatio, Latin; irritation, French; from irritare.]

1. Provocation; exasperation.

2. Stimulation; vellication.

Violent affections and irritations of the nerves, in any part of the body, is caused by something acrimonious.

IRRUPTION, n. f. [from irruption, Fr. irruption, Latin.]
1. The act of anything forcing an entrance.

Refrain, too suddenly,
To utter what will come at last too soon;

Left evil tidings, with too rude irruption,
Biting thy aged ear, should pierce too deep.

There are frequent incursions made in maritime countries by the irruption of the sea.

A full and sudden irruption of thick melancholick blood into the heart puts a stop to its pulsation.

2. Inroad; burst of invaders into any place.

Notwithstanding the irruptions of the barbarous nations, one can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled.

Is. [1st, Saxon. See To Be.]

1. The third person singular of to be: I am, thou art, he is.

He that is of God, heareth God's words.

Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil; neither is it in them to do good.

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes for my single state of man, that function
Is mother'd in my fume, and nothing is.

But what is it not.

2. It is sometimes expressed by is.

There's some among you have beheld me fighting.

ISABELLA, n. f. [from isabella, a kind of colour.

ISCHIA/DICK, adj. [from ischia, Fr. ischia, Latin.] In anatomy, an epithet given to the veins of the foot that terminate in the crural.

ISCHURY, n. f. [from ischuria, Fr. ischuria, Latin.] A stoppage of urine, whether by gravel or other cause.

ISCHURIC, adj. [from ischuria, Fr. ischuria, Latin.] Such medicines as force urine when suppressed.

1. A termination added to an adjective to express diminution, a small degree, or incipient state of any quality: as, bluish, tending to blue; brightish, somewhat bright.

2. It is likewise sometimes the termination of a gentle or possitive adjective: as, Swedish, Danish; the Danish territories, or territories of the Danes.

3. It likewise notes participation of the qualities of the substantive to which it is added: as foolish, manly, mannish; regue, reguish.

ISICLE, n. f. [More properly icicle, from ice; but ice should rather be written ise; 1st, Saxon.] A pendant shoot of ice.

Do you know this lady?

That's curdled by the frost from purest snow
Hanging on Dian's temple.

The frosts and snows her tender body spare;
Those are not limbs for isicles to tear.

ISINGLASS, n. f. [from ice, or ise, and glass; that is, matter congealed into glass; ichthyocolla, Latin.]

Isinglass is a tough, firm, and light substance, of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent, much resembling glue, but cleaner and sweeter. We usually receive it in twisted pieces, of a roundish figure like a staple, which the druggists divide into thin threads like skins, that easily dissolve. The fish from which isinglass is prepared is one of the cartilaginous kind, and a species of surgeon: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and in its general figure greatly resembles the surgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Bo-rithness, the Volga, and many other of the larger rivers of Europe. From the intestines of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. The greatest quantity of isinglass is made in Russia. It is an excellent agglutinant and strengthener, and often prescribed in galls and broths. The wine-coopers find it efficacious for clearing wines.

The cure of putrefaction requires an incaffating diet, as
All vici'd broths, hartshorn, ivory, and isinglass.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as isinglass.

ISS

ISINGLASS, n. f. This is a fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. It is found in broad masses, composed of a multitude of extremely thin plates or flakes. The masses are of a brownish or redish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass.

It is found in Mulkova, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. The ancients made their windows of it, instead of glass. It is also sometimes used for glass before pictures, and for horn in lanthorns.

ISLAND, n. f. [from insula, Latin; isola, Italian; caland, Erle. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,
An island shades it from the rolling seas,
And forms a port.

Some safer world in depth of woods embrac'd,
Some happier island in the wat'ry waste.

ISLANDER, n. f. [from island. Pronounce islander.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and unhopitable:
those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
Unpolish'd men, and boist'rous as their seas;

The native islanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air.

ISLE, n. f. [from isla, French; insula, Latin. Pronounce ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

Is it not an easy matter
To make lord William Hastings of our mind,
For the intaiment of this noble duke
In the feat royal of this famous isle?

The dreadful fight
Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:
Seas stain'd with gore I sing, advent'rous toil,

And how these monsters did disarm an isle.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for isle, from isle, French, from aila, Latin, the isle being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from alier, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or publick building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long sounding isles and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy sits.

ISOPERIMETRICAL, n. f. [from isoperimetricus, and metron.] In geometry, are such figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest.

ISOSCELES, n. f. [from isocelus, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal.

ISSUE, n. f. [from issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.

2. Exit; egress; or passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death.

Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life.

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been, if that issue of wealth had been stopped?

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine issues.

If I were ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wisest.

But let the issue correspondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterprise.

If things were cast upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin 'ill man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy.

Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the atheist desires.

4. Termination;

ISS

4. Termination; conclusion.
He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue.
What issue of my love remains for me!
How wild a passion works within my breast!
With what prodigious flames am I possest!
Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty.
Sequel deduced from premises.
I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion.
6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.
This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue.
7. Evacuation.
A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. Mat. ix. 20.
8. Progeny; offspring.
O nation miserable!
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Since that the trust issue of thy throne,
By his own intercession stands accurst.
Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd
True paradise, under the Æthiop line
By Nilus' head.
This old peaceful prince, as heav'n decreed,
Was blest'd with no male issue to succeed.
The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to confute with this hypothesis. Locke.
9. [In law.] Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or exences of suit; sometime for profits of lands or tenements; sometime for that point of matter depending in the suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury. Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be questio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be questio facti.
To ISSUE. v. n. [from the noun; issue, Fr. issure, Italian.]
1. To come out; to pass out of any place.
Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house.
From the utmost end of the head branches there issued out a gummy juice.
Waters issued from a cave.
Ere Pallas issued from the thunderer's head,
Dulness o'er all posses'd her ancient right.
2. To make an eruption.
Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away.
See that none hence issue forth a spy.
Haste, arm your Ardeans, issue to the plain;
With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train.
At length there issued, from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind.
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Straight issue through the fides assembling swarms.
Full for the port the Ithacensians stand,
And furl their sails, and issue on the land.
3. To proceed as an offspring.
Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away.
4. To be produced by any fund.
These altars issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood.
5. To run out in lines.
It would be tried in pipes, being made with a belly towards the lower end, and then issuing into a straight concave again.
To ISSUE. v. a.
1. To fend out; to fend forth.
A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits.
2. To fend out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense.
If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a protestation.
Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mourning god:
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deities.

IT

- In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth.
ISSUELESS. adj. [from issue.] Without offspring; without descendants.
Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless.
I have done sin;
For which the heav'n's, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless.
ISTHMUS. n. f. [from isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.
There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineeth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnablely fortified.
The north side of the Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas.
O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that dost proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet can't it not wave nor wind fustain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again.
Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it.
Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution.
Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great.
IT. pronoun. [It, Saxon.]
1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things.
Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself.
Will our great anger learn to stoop so low?
I know it cannot.
Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who master art of it.
His son, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home.
The time will come, it will, when you shall know
The rage of love.
How can I speak? or how, fir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more.
A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions!
The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabric began to melt.
If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice.
2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.
How is it with our general?
—Even so
As with a man by his own alms impos'd,
And with his charity slain.
3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.
It's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will.
4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.
He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,
He lifted with such might and strength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length.
The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry.
5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis.
If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure.
The Lacedemonians, at the straits of Thermopylae, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth.
I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds.
A mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth.
Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it.
6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or rudely to persons.
Let us after him,
Who's care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a perils kinman.

ITE

- Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him.
7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the ity of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.
Who was't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word Macduff is fled to England.
—'Tis I, that made thy widows.
—'Tis these that early taint the female soul.
ITCH. n. f. [from itch, Saxon.]
1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised as microscopes have discovered by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.
Lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrow of our youths,
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains.
The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou can't not be healed.
As if divinity had catch'd
The itch, on purpose, to be scratch'd.
2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.
3. A constant teasing desire.
A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting.
He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king.
From servants company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways.
At half mankind when gen'rous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue; for he thinks them knaves:
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise.
To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.
A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration.
My right eye itches; some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear.
2. To long; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.
Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.—Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one.
Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm.
To tell and mart your offices for gold.
The itching ears, being an epidemic disease, give fair opportunity to every mountebank.
All such have fill an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing side.
ITCH. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.
ITIM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.
ITIM. n. f.
1. A new article.
I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by item.
If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none.
2. A hint; an innuendo.
To ITERATE. v. a. [from iterate, Latin.]
1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.
We covet to make the palms especially familiar unto all: this is the very cause why we iterate the palms oftner than any other part of Scripture besides; the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone to read them, as other parts of Scripture he doth.
If the one may monthly, the other may daily be iterated.
In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest.
The kings, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would de-fist from hostility.
There be two kinds of reflections of sounds; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly: the other in con-

JUD

- currence, when the sound reflecting, returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterateth it not, but amplifieth it.
2. To do over again.
Ashes thoroughly burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions.
Adam took no thought,
Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate
Her former trespasses fear'd, the more to sooth
Him with her lov'd society.
ITERANT. adj. [from iterans, Latin.] Repeating.
Waters being near, make a current echo; but being farther off, they make an iterant echo.
ITERATION. n. f. [from iteration, French; iteratio, Latin.] Repetition; recital over again.
Truth tir'd with iteration
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon.
—Ay, 'twas he that told me first.
—My husband!
—What needs this iteration, woman?
I say, thy husband.
Iterations are commonly loss of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chafeth away many a frivolous speech.
In all these respects it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is further improved by the frequent iteration and repetition.
ITERANT. adj. [from iterant, French.] Wandering; not settled.
It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of iterant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares.
ITERINARY. n. f. [from iteraire, French; itinerarium, Latin.] A book of travels.
The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom.
ITERINARY. adj. [from iteraire, Fr. itinerarius, Lat.] Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.
He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it were rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress.
ITSELF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.
Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Himself for being there?
Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor.
JUBILANT. adj. [from jubilans, Latin.] Uttering songs of triumph.
The planets lifting flood,
While the bright pomp ascended jubilant.
JUBILATION. n. f. [from jubilatio, Fr. jubilatio, Lat.] The act of declaring triumph.
JUBILEE. n. f. [from jubilis, Fr. jubilum, from jubi, low Latin.] A public festivity; a time of rejoicing; a season of joy.
Angels ut'ring joy, heav'n rung
With jubilee, and loud hosanna's fill'd
Th' eternal regions.
Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing; the recreation of the judgment, or rejoicing, the jubilee of reason.
The town was all a jubilee of feasts.
JUCUNDITY. n. f. [from jucunditas, jucundus, Latin.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.
The new or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves, will have activity enough to excite the earthiest soul, and raise a smile from the most composed tempers.
JUDAS TREE. n. f. [from jilguastrum, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a papilionaceous flower, whose wings are placed above the standard; the head is composed of two petals; the pointal, which rises in the centre of the flower-cup, and is encompassed with the lamina, afterward becomes a long flat pod, containing several kidney shaped seeds: to which may be added roundish leaves, growing alternately on the branches.
Judas tree yields a fine purplish, bright, red blossom in the Spring, and is increased by layers.
To JUDAZE. v. n. [from judaizer, Fr. judaize, low Latin.] To conform to the manner of the Jews.
Paul judaiz'd with Jews, was all to all.
JUDGE. n. f. [from juge, French; judez, Latin.]
1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.
Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?
A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows is God in his holy habitation.
Thou art judge
Of all things made, and judgest only right.
It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully: it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign judge of his own art.
2. One

JUD

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.
My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
A single voice; and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the judges. Shakespeare, H. VIII.
3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.
How darest your pride,
As in a lifted field to fight your cause,
Unask'd the royal grant; nor marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try.
A perfect judge will read each piece of wit,
With the same spirit that its author writ.
To JUDGE. v. n. [i. juger, French; judice, Latin.]
1. To pass sentence.
My wrong be upon thee; the Lord judge between thee and me.
Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment.
2. To form or give an opinion.
Behrew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge aright.
Ye judge after the flesh; I judge no man.
Authors to themselves,
Both what they judge and what they chuse.
If I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge, by the copies, which was Virgil, and which Ovid. Dryden.
Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident.
He proceeds in his inquiry into sciences, resolved to judge of them freely.
3. To discern; to distinguish.
How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud?
Judge in yourselves: is it comely a woman pray unto God uncovered?
How properly the Tories may be called the whole body of the British nation, I leave to any one's judging.
To JUDGE. v. a.
1. To pass sentence upon; to examine authoritatively; to determine finally.
Chaos shall judge the strife.

We shall judge among the heathen; he shall fill the places with the dead bodies.
Judge not, that ye be not judged.
Let no man judge you in meat or drink.
JUDGE. n. f. [from judge.] One who forms judgment; or passes sentence.
The vulgar threatened to be their oppressors, and judges of their judges.
They who guide themselves merely by what appears, are ill judges of what they have not well examined.
JUDGMENT. n. f. [from judgement, French.]
1. The power of discerning the relations between one term or one proposition and another.
O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason.
The faculty, which God has given man to supply the want of certain knowledge, is judgment, whereby the mind takes any proposition to be true or false, without perceiving a demonstrative evidence in the proofs.
Judgment is that whereby we join ideas together by affirmation or negation; so, this tree is high.
2. Doom; the right or power of passing judgment.
If my suspect be false, forgive me, God;
For judgment only doth belong to thee.
3. The act of exercising judicature.
They gave judgment upon him.
When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclosed
In majesty severe,
And sit in judgment on my soul,
O how shall I appear.
4. Determination; decision.
Where distinctions or identities are purely material, the judgment is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding.
We shall make a certain judgment what kind of dissolution that earth was capable of.
Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgment of things proposed to our inquiry.
5. The quality of distinguishing propriety and impropriety; criticism.
Judgment, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man in the rapture of poetical composition.
Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own.

JUD

6. Opinion; notion.
I see mens judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward
Draw the inward quality after them.
To suffer all alike.
When she did think my master lov'd her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you.
7. Sentence against a criminal.
When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd
With agony.
The chief priests informed me, desiring to have judgment against him.
On Adam last this judgment he pronounc'd.
8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.
The judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification.
The precepts, promises, and threatenings of the Gospel will rise up in judgment against us, and the articles of our faith will be to many articles of accusation.
9. Punishment inflicted by providence, with reference to some particular crime.
This judgment of the heavens that makes us tremble,
Touches us not with pity.
We cannot be guilty of greater uncharitableness, than to interpret afflictions as punishments and judgments: it aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance.
10. Distribution of justice.
The Jews made insurrection against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat.
Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it.
In judgments between rich and poor, consider not what the poor man needs, but what is his own.
A bold and wife petitioner goes frair to the throne and judgment seat of the monarch.
11. Judiciary laws; statutes.
If ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them, the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant.
12. The last doom.
The dreadful judgment day
So dreadful will not be as was his fight.
JUDICATORY. n. f. [from judicio, Latin.]
1. Distribution of justice.
No such crime appeared as the lords, the supreme court of judicatory, would judge worthy of death.
2. Human judicatures give sentence on matters of right and wrong, but inquire not into bounty and beneficence.
JUDICATURE. n. f. [from judicatus, Fr. judice, Latin.] Power of distributing justice.
The honour of the judges in their judicature is the king's honour.
If he should bargain for a place of judicature, let him be rejected with shame.
In judicatures to take away the trumpet, the scarlet, the attendance, makes justice naked as well as blind.
JUDICIAL. adj. [from judicium, Latin.]
1. Practised in the distribution of public justice.
What government can be without judicial proceedings?
And what judicature without a religious oath?
2. Inflicted on as a penalty.
The resistance of those will cause a judicial hardness.
JUDICIALLY. adv. [from judicial.] In the forms of legal justice.
It will behave us to think that we see God still looking on, and weighing all our thoughts, words, and actions in the balance of infallible justice, and passing the same judgment which he intends hereafter judicially to declare.
JUDICIARY. adj. [from judiciarius, Fr. judiciarius, Latin.] Passing judgment upon any thing.
Before weight be laid upon notions of judiciary astrologers, the influence of constellations ought, by severe experiments, to be made out.
JUDICIOUS. adj. [from judicieux, French.] Prudent; wise; skillful in any matter or affair.
For your husband,
He's noble, wife, judicious, and best knows
The fits o' th' season.
Love hath his feat
In reason, and is judicious.
To each favour meaning we apply,
And palate call judicious.
We are beholden to judicious writers of all ages for those discoveries they have left behind them.
JUDICIOUSLY. adv. [from judicieux.] Skillfully; wisely; with just determination.
So bold, yet so judiciously you dare,
That your least praise is to be regular.

JUK

- Longinus has judiciously preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to excellence.
JUG. n. f. [from jugges, Danish.] A large drinking vessel with a gibbous or swelling belly.
You'd rail upon the hostels of the house,
Because she bought stone jugs and no seal'd quarts.
He fetch'd 'em drink,
Fill'd a large jug up to the brim.
To JUGGLE. v. n. [from jouger or jongler, Fr. jacari, Lat.]
1. To play tricks by flight of hand; to show false appearances of extraordinary performances.
The ancient miracle of Memnon's statue seems to be a juggling of the Ethiopian priests.
2. To practise artifice or imposture.
Be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense.
Is't possible the spells of France should juggle
Men into such strange mockeries?
They ne'er forswore themselves, nor lied,
Disdain'd to stay for friends confents;
Nor juggl'd about settlements.
JUGGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A trick by legerdemain.
2. An imposture; a deception.
The notion was not the invention of politicians, and a juggle of state to cozen the people into obedience.
JUGGLER. n. f. [from juggle.]
1. One who practises flight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.
They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working forerers that change the mind,
Disguis'd cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like liberties of sin.
I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought.
Aristæus was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Cæcilius, and a notable juggler.
Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and impostors, do daily delude them.
The juggler which another's flight can show,
But teaches how the world his own may know.
One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand; but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it intercedes or dwindles.
What magic makes our money rise,
When dropt into the southern main;
Or do these jugglers cheat us?
2. A cheat; a trickish fellow.
O me, you juggler; oh, you canker blossom,
You thief of love; what have you come by night,
And stol'n my love's heart from him?
I sing no harm
To officer, juggler, or justice of peace.
JUGGLINGLY. adv. [from juggle.] In a deceptive manner.
JUGULAR. adj. [from jugulum, Latin.] Belonging to the throat.
A gentleman was wounded into the internal jugular, through his neck.
JUICE. n. f. [from jus, French; jus, Dutch.]
1. The liquor, sap, or water of plants and fruits.
If I define wine, I must say, wine is a juice not liquid, or wine is a substance; for juice includes both substance and liquid.
Unnumber'd fruits,
A friendly juice to cool thir'd rage contain.
2. The fluid in animal bodies.
Juice in language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, scarce covering the bone.
An animal whose juices are unfound can never be nourish'd; unfound juices can never repair the fluids.
JUICELESS. adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice.
Divine Providence has spread her table every-where; not with a juicy green carpet, but with succulent herbage and nourishing grass.
When Boreas' spirit blusters fore,
Beware th' inclement heav'n's; now let thy heart
Crackle with juicy boughs.
JUICINESS. n. f. [from juice.] Plenty of juice; succulence.
JUICY. adj. [from juice.] Moist; full of juice.

JUB. n. f. [from zizyphus, Lat.] A plant whose flower contombs or swelling belly.
JUBES. } sists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose; out of whose emplantment rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an oblong fleshy fruit, shaped like an olive, including an hard shell divided in cells, each containing an oblong nut or kernel. The fruit is like a small plum, but it has little flesh upon the stone.
JULAP. n. f. [A word of Arabick original; julapium, low Lat. julep, Fr.]
Julap is an extemporaneous form of medicine, made of simple and compound water sweetened, and serves for a vehicle to other forms not so convenient to take alone.
Behold this cordial julep here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds
With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mixt.
If any part of the after-birth be left, endeavour the bringing that away; and by good sudorifics and cordials expel the venom, and temperate the heat and acrimony by juleps and emulsions.
JULUS. n. f.
1. July flower. See CLOVE-GILLIFLOWER and GILLIFLOWER.
2. Julius, among botanists, denotes those long worm-like tufts or palms, as they are called in willows, which at the beginning of the year grow out, and hang pendular down from hazels, walnut-trees, &c.
JULY. n. f. [from Julius, Lat. juillet, Fr.] The month anciently called quintilis, or the fifth from March, named July in honour of Julius Cæsar; the seventh month from January.
July I would have drawn in a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bosom sun-burnt.
JUMART. n. f. [French.]
Mules and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an ass and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent.
To JUMBLE. v. a. [in Chaucer, jembre, from combler, French, Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.
Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed.
A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy scripture.
Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky mains make people wife;
And jumbled words, if fortune throw them,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem.
Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were at first created, and are continually ordered for the best, than that the whole universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favourably cobbled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter.
How tragedy and comedy embrace,
How farce and epick get a jumbled race.
That the universe was formed by a fortuitous coitour of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy.
To JUMBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.
They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony.
JUMBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.
Had the world been coagmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable.
What jumble here is made of ecclesiastical revenues, as if they were all alienated with equal justice.
JUMENT. n. f. [from jument, Fr. jumentum, Lat.] Beast of burthen.
Juments, as horses, oxen, and asses, have no eructation, or belching.
To JUMP. v. n. [from gumpen, Dutch.]
1. To leap; to skip; to move forward without step or sliding.
Not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and an half by the square.
Here, upon this bank and shelve of time,
We'd jump the life to come.
And fearless, quench their thirst, while I look on,
And take me for their fellow-citizen.
So have I seen from Severn's brink
A flock of geese jump down together,
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
And swimming never wet a feather.
Candidates petition the emperor to entertain the court with a dance on the rope; and whoever jumps the highest succeeds in the office.

2. To leap suddenly.
One Peregrinus jumped into a fiery furnace at the Olympic games, only to shew the company how far his vanity could carry him.
We see a little, presume a great deal, and so jump to the conclusion. Spectator, N^o. 626.
3. To jolt.
The noise of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nab. iii. 2.

Of place, time, fortune, do cohere and jump
That I am Viola. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
In some sort it jumps with my humour. Shaksp. Othello.
But though they jump not on a just account,
Yet do they all confirm a Turkish fleet. Shaksp. Othello.
Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barbarous nations. Shaksp. Othello.
Herein perchance he jumps not with Liphias. Hakewill.
Never did trully quire with knight,
Or knight with quire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras, p. i.
This shews how perfectly the jump
And commonwealth in nature jump:
For as a fly that goes to bed,
Refts with his tail above his head;
So in this mungrel state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers. Hudibras, p. iii.
Good wits jump, and mine the nimble of the two. More.
Good now, how your devotions jump with mine. Dryd.
I am happier for finding our judgments jump in the notion. Pope to Swift.
- JUMP. adv. Exactly; nicely. Obsolete.
Otherwise one man could not excel another, but all should be either absolutely good, as hitting jump that indivisible point or center wherein goodness consisteth; or else missing it, they should be excluded out of the number of well doers. Hooker.
But since to jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Poland wars, and you from England,
Are here arriv'd. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump, when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife. Shaksp. Othello.
- JUMP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of jumping; a leap; a skip.
The surest way for a learner is, not to advance by jumps and large strides; let that, which he sets himself to learn next, be as nearly conjoined with what he knows already, as is possible. Locke.
2. A lucky chance.
Do not exceed
The precept of this frowl: our fortune lies Upon this jump. Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark green. Peasam.
JUNIOR. adj. [junior, Lat.] One younger than another.
The fools my junior by a year,
Are tortur'd with suspense and fear,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd to stand between. Swift.
According to the nature of men of years, I was repining at the rise of my junior, and unequal distribution of wealth. Tatler, N^o. 100.
- JUNIPER. n. f. [juniperus, Lat.] A plant.
The leaves of the juniper are long, narrow, and prickly; the male flowers are, in some species, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree; but in other species they are produced on different trees from the fruit: the fruit is a soft pulpy berry, containing three seeds in each. Miller.
Some of our common juniper shrubs are males and some females, of the same species. The male shrubs produce, in April and May, a small kind of jult with apices on them, very large, but only the berries, which do not ripen till the second year, and then do not immediately fall off; so that it is no uncommon thing to see the berries of three different years at once on the same tree. The shrub is very common with us on heaths and barren hills, but the berries used medicinally in our shops are brought from Germany, where it is greatly more abundant. The berries are powerful attenuants, diuretics, and carminative. Hill.
A clyster may be made of the common decoctions, or of mallows, bay, and juniper berries, with oil of linseed. Wijm.
- JUNK. n. f. [probably an Indian word.]
1. A small ship of China.
America, which have now but junks and canoes, aboundeth then in tall ships. Bacon's New Atlantis.
2. Pieces of old cable.
JUNKET. n. f. [properly juncate. See JUNCATE.]
1. A sweetmeat.
You know, there wants no junkets at the feast. Shaksp.
2. A stolen entertainment.
To JUNKET. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To feast secretly; to make entertainments by stealth.
Whatever good bits you can pilfer in the day, save them to junket with your fellow servants at night. Swift.
2. To feast.
Job's children junketed and feasted together often, but the reckoning cost them dear at last. South's Sermons.
The apostle would have no revelling or junketing. South.
JUNTO. n. f. [Italian.] A cabal; a kind of men combined in any secret design.
Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work, at length come and dance attendance for approbation upon a junto of petty tyrants, acted by party and prejudice, who denied fitness from learning, and grace from morality. South.
From this time began an intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers, which had like to have ended in my destruction. Gulliver's Travels.
- IVORY. n. f. [ivoire, French; ebur, Lat.]
Ivory is a hard, solid, and firm substance, of a fine white colour, and capable of a very good polish: it is the dens excertus of the elephant, who carries on each side of his jaws a tooth of six or seven feet in length, of the thickness of a man's thigh at the base, and almost entirely solid; the two sometimes weighing three hundred and thirty pounds: these ivory tusks are hollow from the base to a certain height, and the cavity is filled with a compact medullary substance, seeming to have a great number of glands in it. The finest ivory is brought from the East-Indies, where great quantity of it is not taken immediately from the head of the animal, but found buried in the earth. The ivory of the islands of Ceylon and of Achem do not become yellow in the wearing as all other ivory does, and it therefore bears a greater price than of the Guinea coast. The preparations of ivory have the same restorative virtues with those of the hartshorn. Hill.
There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
Draw Erato with a sweet and lovely countenance, bearing a heart with an ivory key. Peasam.
From their ivory port the cherubim Forth ill'd. Milton.
Two gates the silent house of sleep adorn,
Of polish'd ivory this, that of transparent horn:
True visions through transparent horn arise,
Through polish'd ivory pass deluding lies. Dryden's En. Jupp.

- JURPO'ST. n. f. [juppon, French.] A short close coat.
Some wore a breast-plate and a light juppon,
Their horses cloth'd with rich caparison. Dryden.
JURAT. n. f. [juratus, Lat. jura juré, Fr.] A magistrate in some corporations.
JURATORY. adj. [juratoire, Fr. juré, Lat.] Giving an oath.
A contumacious person may be compelled to give juratory caution de parents jur. Allyst's Parergon.
JURIDICAL. adj. [juridicus, Lat. juridique, Fr.]
1. Acting in the distribution of justice.
2. Used in courts of justice.
According to a juridical account and legal signification, time within memory, by the statute of Westminster, was settled in the beginning of the reign of king Richard the first. Hale's Hist. of the Common Law of England.
JURIDICALLY. adj. [from juridical.] With legal authority; according to forms of justice.
JURISCONSULT. n. f. [juris consultus, Latin.] One who gives his opinion in cases of law.
There is mention made, in a decision of the jurisconsult Javolenus, of a Britannick fleet. Arbutnot in Cæsar.
JURISDICTION. n. f. [jurisdicere, Lat. jurisdiction, Fr.]
1. Legal authority; extent of power.
Sometimes the practice of such jurisdiction may swerve through error even in the very best, and for other respects, where less integrity is.
Without the king's assent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a legate; by which power
You main'd the jurisdiction of all bishops. Shaksp. Henry VI.
All persons exercising ecclesiastical jurisdiction should have the king's arms in their seals of office. Hayward.
This place exempt
From heav'n's high jurisdiction. Milton.
As Adam had no such power as gave him sovereign jurisdiction over mankind. Locke.
This custom in a popular state, of impeaching particular men, may seem to be nothing else but the people's chusing to exercise their own jurisdiction in person. Swift.
2. District to which any authority extends.
JURISPRUDENCE. n. f. [jurisprudentia, Fr. jurisprudentia, Lat.] The science of law.
JURIST. n. f. [juriste, Fr. juré, Lat.] A civil lawyer; a man who professes the science of the law; a civilian.
This is not to be measured by the principles of jurists. Bac.
JUROR. n. f. [juror, Lat.] One that serves on the jury.
Were the jurors picked out of choice men, this would be as bad; for the evidence will be as deceitful as the verdict. Spenser's State of Ireland.
I shall find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful, I see your end,
'Tis my undoing. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
I sing no harm, good foot! to any weight,
Officer, jugler, or justice of peace,
Jurors, or judge. Donne.
About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in. Hayward.
JURY. n. f. [jurata, Lat. juré, Fr.]
Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver a truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the eccleatour make inquiry in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest: if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize; assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, empanelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half year courts of the justices errants, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petty juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, lilla vera, or dis-

- allow by writing ignotamus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by cartiorari; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred, where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant: according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the sake of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Cowell.
The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness. Shaksp. H. IV.
Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bac.
JURYMAN. n. f. [jury and man.] One who is impanelled on a jury.
The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.
No judge was known, upon or off the bench, to use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests of any one single jurymen, much less of a whole jury. Swift's Miscel.
JURYMANS. n. f. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast lost in a fight, or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the mizen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a hard shift to sail. Harris.
JUST. adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Latin.]
1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the distribution of justice.
Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age. Dryden.
2. Honest; without crime in dealing with others.
Just balances, just weights, and a just ephaph. Lev. xix.
Men are commonly so just to virtue and goodness, as to praise it in others, even when they do not practise it themselves. Tillotson's Sermons.
Just of thy word, in ev'ry thought sincere,
Who knew no with but what the world might hear. Pope.
3. Exact; proper; accurate.

Just precepts thus from great examples giv'n,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from heav'n. Pope.
Just to the tale, as present at the fray,
Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.
Once on a time La Mancha's knights, they say,
A certain bard encount'ring on the way,
Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
As ere could Dennis of the laws o' th' stage. Pope.
Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Watts's Logic.
4. Virtuous; innocent; pure.
Noah was a just man, and perfect. Gen. vi. 9.
How should man be just with God? Job ix. 2.
A just man falleth seven times and riseth. Prov. xxiv. 16.
He shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Mat. xiv. 14.
The just th' unjust to serve. Milton.
5. True; not forged; not falsely imputed; well grounded.
Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit. Hooker.
Me though just right
Did first create your leader. Milton.
6. Equally retributed.
He received a just recompence of reward, Heb. ii. 2.
Whose damnation is just. Rom. iii. 8.
As Hefod sings, spread water o'er thy fields,
And a most just and glad increase it yields. Denham.
7. Complete without superfluity or defect.
He was a comely personage, a little above just stature, well and frail limbed, but slender. Bacon's Henry VII.
8. Regular; orderly.
When all
The war shall stand ranged in its just array,
And dreadful pomp; then will I think on thee. Addison.

To bury'd merit raise the tardy buff.
Vanity of Human Wishes.
- JUST. adv.
1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.
The god Pan guided my hand just to the heart of the beast. Sidney.
They go about to make us believe that they are just of the same opinion, and that they only think such ceremonies are not to be used when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be established. Hosier.
There, ev'n just there he stood, and as the spoke,
Where last the spectre was, she cast her look. Dryden.
A few seem to understand him right; just as when our Saviour said, in an allegorical sense, except ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you.
Bentley's Sermons.
'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.
2. Merely; barely.
It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themselves upon just nothing at all. L'Estrange.
The nereids swam before critus called for loaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.

- JUST. n. f. [justus, French;] Mock encounter on horseback;
tilt; tournament.
None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than justs, both with sword and lance. Sidney.
What news from Oxford? hold those justs and triumphs?
Shakespeare's Richard II.
Among themselves the tourney they divide,
In equal squadrons rang'd on either side;
Then turn'd their horses heads, and man to man,
And fled to speed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryden.
- To JUST. v. n. [justus, French;] Mock encounter on horseback;
tilt; tournament.
1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.
2. To push; to drive; to justify.
- JUSTICE. n. f. [justitia, French; justitia, Latin;]
1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due.
O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sem. xv. 4.
The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stabilities,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Lee.
2. Vindicative retribution; punishment.
This shews you are above
Yon justices, that these our nether crimes
So speedily can vengeance. Shakespeare, King Lear.
He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut. xxxiii. 21.
Left justice overtake us. Jl. lix. 9.
Examples of mercy, for comfort to others: the one procures fear, and the other love. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
3. Right; assertion of right.
Draw thy sword,
That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakespeare, King Lear.
4. [Justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment.
And thou, Eldras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Esdr. viii. 23.
5. Justice of the King's Bench. [Justiciarius de Banco Regis.]
Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest; wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Anglie. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assessors heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they

JUS

- be incident to any personal action depending before them.
Give that whipster his errand,
He'll take my lord chief justice warrant. Prior.
6. Justice of the Common Pleas. [Justiciarius Communium Pla-citum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum. He with his assessors originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Covel.
7. Justice of the Forest. [Justiciarius Forestie.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert; of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Covel.
8. Justices of Assize. [Justicarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assizes; the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, for many men might not, without great inconvenience, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorised and sent down to them. Covel.
9. Justices in Eyre. [Justicarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties, to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the king's bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Termi-ner, because they were sent upon some one or few especial causes, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and counties of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Covel.
10. Justices of Gaol Delivery. [Justicarii ad Gaulas delivrandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to malapprise those prisoners, that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assize were likewise authorised to this. Covel.
11. Justices of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assize; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day: nisi prius justiciarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius, as well as justices of assize, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Covel.
12. Justices of Peace. [Justicarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Covel.
- The justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakespeare, As you like it.
Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.
The justices of peace are of great use; anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
- I sing no harm
To officers, jugglers, or justice of peace. Dome.
- To JUSTICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. A word not in use.
As for the title of proscriptio, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justiced himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.
Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended, for intending to poison the young queen of Scots, the king delivered him to the French kings, to be justiced by him at his pleasure. Hayward.
- JUSTICEMENT. n. f. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.
JUSTICER. n. f. [from to justice.] Administrator of justice.
An old word.
He was a singular good justicer; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Davies on Ireland.
- JUSTICESHIP. n. f. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Swift.
- JUSTICIABLE. adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice. Justifiable.

JUS

- JUSTIFIABLE. adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason; conformable to justice.
Just are the ways of God, Milton's Agonistes.
And justifiable to men.
Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- JUSTIFIABLENESS. n. f. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.
Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before
God, never think they have human strength enough.
King Charles.
- JUSTIFIABLY. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right.
A man may more justifiably throw crofs and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke.
- JUSTIFICATION. n. f. [justification, French; justificatio, low Latin.]
1. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support; absolution from guilt.
I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Among theological arguments, in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. Swift.
2. Deliverance by pardon from sins past.
In such righteousness
To them by faith imputed, they may find justification towards God, and peace
Of conscience. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. xii.
'Tis the confirmation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the confirmation of faith by charity and good works, that God ac-cepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare aptness of faith to bring forth works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hammond.
- JUSTIFICATOR. n. f. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.
JUSTIFIER. n. f. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.
That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Ro. iii. 26.
- To JUSTIFY. v. a. [justifier, French; justifier, low Latin;]
1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.
The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor;
I cannot justify, whom law condemns. Shakespeare, H. VI.
They say, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children. Mat. xi.
How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman?
There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wife man that justifies in judgment. Ecclesi. x. 25.
You're neither justified, nor yet accus'd. Dryden.
2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.
When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel faithhood. Sidney.
What the did, whatever in itself,
Her doing seem'd to justify the deed. Milt. Par. Lost.
My unwilling flight the gods enforce,
And that must justify our sad divorce. Denham.
Yet still thy foils shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense. Dryden.
Let others justify their missions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession. Aberbury's Sermons.
3. To free from past sin by pardon.
By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Acts xiii.
- To JUSTIFY. v. n. [from just, justus, French;] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.
While injury of chance
Puts back leave taking, justifies roughly by All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.
The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justify one against another in the broad ways. Nab. ii. 4.
Argo pass'd
Through Bosphorus, betwixt the justifying rocks. Milton.
Late the clouds
Toss'd with winds, rude in their shock,
Tine the flant lightning. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Not one starry spark,
But gods meet gods, and justify in the dark.
Courtiers therefore justify for a grant;
And, when they break their friendship, plead their want.
Murmuring noises rise in every street;
The more remote run stumbling with their fear,
And, in the dark, men justify as they meet. Dryden.

Running in the dark, a man may justle a post.
Collier of the Eagerness of Desire.
Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappiness in its absence, is justled out, to make way for the removal of those uneasinesses we feel. Locke.
We justled one another out, and disputed the post for a great while. Addison's Guardian.
- JUSTLY. adv. [from just.]
1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner.
Nothing can justly be despised, that cannot justly be blamed;
where there is no choice, there can be no blame. South.
With ignominy scourg'd, in open fight;
Next view the Tarquin kings; th' avenging sword
Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restor'd. Dryden.
The goddess, studious of her Grecians fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting justly, and in writing well. Prior.
2. Properly; exactly; accurately.
Their artful hands instruct the lute to sound;
Their feet assist their hands, and justly beat the ground. Dryden.
- JUSTNESS. n. f. [from just.]
1. Justice; reasonableness; equity. Justness is properly applied to things, and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.
It maketh unto the right of the war against him, whose success uleth commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made. Spenser on Ireland.
We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it. Shakespeare.
2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety.
I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented with all the justness and gracefulness of action. Dryden.
I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatick poet, when he had any dispute with particular persons about the justness and regularity of his productions. Addison's Guardian.
- To JUT. v. n. [This word is supposed to be corrupted from jut, perhaps from shoot.] To push or shoot into prominences; to come out beyond the main bulk.
Insulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awleth throne. Shakespeare, R. III.
All the projected or jutting parts should be very moderate, especially the cornices of the lower orders. Wotton.
The land, if not restrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck, and jutting to the sea. Dryden.
A port secure for ships to ride,
Broke by the jutting land on either side;
In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden.
It seems to jut out of the structure of the poem, and be independent of it. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
- To JUTTY. v. a. [from jut.] To shoot out beyond.
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like a brass cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully, as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and juty his confounded base, Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Shakespeare, H. V.
- JUVENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Latin.] Young; youthful.
Learning hath its infancy when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when it is solid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhaust. Bacon's Essays.
- JUVENILITY. n. f. [from juvenile.] Youthfulness.
The reformation of grey heirs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle.
Glanv. Scetp. c. 21.
Customary strains and abstracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications.
Glanv. Scetp. Preface.

JUXTAPOSITION. n. f. [juxtaposition, French; juxta and positio, Latin.] Apposition; the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a meer juxtaposition. Glanv. Sculp.

Ivy. n. f. [ivy, Saxon; hedera, Latin.] A plant. The characters are: it is a parasitick plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment: the leaves are angular; the flowers, for the most part, consist of six leaves, and are succeeded by round black berries, which grow in round bunches, each of which, for the most part, contains four seeds. Miller.

A gown made of the finest wool;
A belt of straw, and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me and be my love. Raleigh.

JY MOLD. adj. [See GIMBAL.] Mili. Parad. Lost.

The clasping ivy where to climb.
Their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;
And in their pale dull mouths the jymold bit
Lies, foul with chew'd grafs, still and motionless. Shakespeare's Henry V.

K.

K E C

K.

A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill; but is not much in use, except after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brick, stick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with e final: as, cløcke, cløcke, triøle. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent e final: as, cløke, brøke, brøke, pike, duke, øke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shock, beck. The English never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

KALENDAR. n. f. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour
Stand as accursed in the calendar. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

KALIT. n. f. [an Arabick word.] Sea-weed, of the ashes of which glass was made, whence the word alkali.

The ashes of the weed kali is sold to the Venetians for their glass works. Bacon.

KAM. adj. Crooked.

Kam, in Erie, is quaint-eyed, and applied to any thing awry: clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, crofs from the purpose. A-schambo, Italian, hence our English a-kimbo.

Clean kam is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kim kam. The blood he hath lost, he dropt it for his country:
And what is left, to lose it by his country,
Were to us all that do't and suffer it,
A brand to th' end o' th' world.
—This is clean kam.

—Meerly awry. Shakespeare.

TO KAW. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a raven, crow, or rook. See CAW.

Jack-daws kawing and fluttering about the nests, set all their young ones a gaping; but having nothing in their empty mouths but noise and air, leave them as hungry as before. Locke.

KAW. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry of a raven or crow.

The dastard crow that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaws her craven-kind doth bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden.

KAYLE. n. f. [quille, French.]

1. Ninepin; kettlepins, of which skittles seems a corruption. And now at keels they try a harmless chance,
And now their cur they teach to fetch and dance. Sidney.

The residue of the time they wear out at coits, kayles, or the like idle exercises. Cowley's Survey of Cornwall.

2. A kind of play still retained in Scotland, in which nine holes ranged in three's are made in the ground, and an iron bullet rolled in among them.

TO KECK. v. n. [kecken, Dutch.] To heave the stomach; to reach at vomiting.

All those diets do dry up humours and rheums, which they first attenuate, and while the humour is attenuated it troubleth the body a great deal more; and therefore patients must not keck at them at the first. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 68.

The faction, is it not notorious?
Keck at the memory of glorious. Swift's Miscel.

TO KECKLE. a cable. To defend a cable round with rope. Amfuerib.

KECKSY. n. f. [commonly hex, cigue, French; cicuta, Latin. Skinner.] Skinner seems to think kecky or hex the same as hemlock. It is used in Staffordshire both for hemlock, and any other hollow jointed plant.

Nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs, Losing both beauty and utility. Shakespeare. Henry V.

KECKY. adj. [from hex.] Resembling a hex. Shakespeare.

An Indian sceptre, made of a sort of cane, without any joint, and perfectly round, consisteth of hard and blackish cylinders, mixed with a soft kecky body; so as at the end cut transversely, it looks as a bundle of wires. Grew.

TO KEDGE. v. a. [kagbe, a small vessel, Dutch.]

In bringing a ship up or down a narrow river, when the wind is contrary to the tide, they set the fore-fail, or fore-top-fail and mizzen, and so let her drive with the tide. The fails are to flat her about, if she comes too near the shore. They also carry out an anchor in the head of the boat, with a hawler that comes from the ship; which anchor, if the ship comes too near the shore, they let fall in the stream, and so wind her head about it; then weigh the anchor again when she is about, which is called kedging, and from this use the anchor a kedger. Harria.

KE'DGER. n. f. [from kedge.] A small anchor used in a river.

See KEDGE.

KEE, the provincial plural of cow, properly kine.

A lass that Cic'ly hight had won his heart,
Cic'ly the western lass that tends the kee. Gay's Past.

KE'DBLACK. n. f. A weed that grows among corn; charnock. Tusser.

KEEL. n. f. [ceele, Saxon; kiel, Dutch; quille, Fr.] The bottom of the ship.

Portunus
Heav'd up his lighten'd keel, and sunk the sand,
And steer'd the sacred vessel. Dryden.

Her sharp bill serves for a keel to cut the air before her;
Her tail she useth as her rudder. Grew's Cosmol. v. i.

Your cables burst, and you must quickly feel
The waves impetuous en'ring at your keel. Swift.

KEELS, the same with kayles, which see.

TO KEEL. v. a. [cælan, Saxon.] This word, which is preserved in Shakespeare, probably signifies to cool, though Hamer explains it otherwise.

To keel seems to mean to drink so deep as to turn up the bottom of the pot, like turning up the keel of a ship. Hamer.

While greasy Joan doth keel the pot. Shakespeare.

KE'ELFAR. n. f. [cælan, Saxon; to cool, and far or vat, a vessel.] Cooler; tub in which liquor is let to cool.

KE'ELSON. n. f. The next piece of timber in a ship to her keel, lying right over it next above the floor timber. Harria.

TO KE'ELHALE. v. a. [keel and hale.] To punish in the sea-men's way, by dragging the criminal under water on one side of the ship and up again on the other.

KEEN. adj. [cene, Saxon; kubn, German; keen, Dutch.]

1. Sharp; well edged; not blunt.

Come thick night
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakespeare.

Here is my keen-edged sword,
Deck'd with fine flower-de-luces on each side. Shakespeare.

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms,
Keen be my fabre, and of proof my arms. Dryden.

A sword keen-edg'd within his right he held,
The warlike emblem of the conquer'd field. Dryden.

2. Severe; piercing.

The winds
Blow moist, and keen, shattering the graceful locks
Of these fair spreading trees; which bids us seek Some better throud. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

The cold was very supportable; but as it changed to the north-west, or north, it became exceedingly keen. Ellis.

3. Eager; vehement.

Never did I know
A creature, that did bear the shape of man,
So keen and greedy to confound a man. Shakespeare.

Keen dispatch of real hunger. Milton.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up a piece of the coat. L'Estrange.

Those curs are so extremely hungry, that they are too keen at the sport, and worry their game. Tatler, N° 62.

This was a prospect so very inviting, that it could not be easily withstood by any who have to keen an appetite for wealth. Swift's Miscel.

KEE

4. Acrimonious; bitter of mind.
Good father cardinal, cry thou, amen,
To my keen curses. Shakep. King John.

spondence with Eudoxus. Addison.
40. To keep under. To oppress; to subdue.
O happy mixture! whereby things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us. Hooker, b. v.
Truth may be smothered a long time, and kept under by violence; but it will break out at last. Stillinger.
To live like those that have their hope in another life, im-

On my better hand Ascanius hings,
And with unequal paces tript along:
Creusa kept behind. Dryden's Æneis.
The goddess born in secret pin'd;
Nor visited the camp, nor in the council join'd;
But keeping close, his gnawing heart he fed
With hopes of vengeance. Dryden's Homer.
And while it keeps there, it keeps within our author's limitation. Locke.
There are cases in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier.
The endeavours Achilles used to meet with Hector, the contrary endeavours of the Trojan to keep out of reach are the intrigue. Pope's View of Epick Poetry.
3. To remain unhurt; to last.
Dikdaim me not, although I be not fair:
Doth beauty keep which never fun can burn,
Nor forms do turn? Sidney, b. i.
Grapes will keep in a vessel half full of wine, so that the grapes touch not the wine. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
If the malt be not thoroughly dried, the ale it makes will not keep. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Of opium; to his keeper this he brought,
Who swallowed unaware the sleepy draught. Dryden.

3. One who has the care of parks, or beasts of chase.
There is an old tale goes, that Herne the hunter,
Sometime a keeper here in Windsor forests,
Doth all the Winter-time, at still of midnight,
Walk round about an oak with ragged horns. Shakespeare.
The first fat buck of all the season's sent,
And keeper takes no fee in compliment. Dryden.

4. One that has the superintendence or care of any thing.
Hilkiah went unto Hildah, keeper of the wardrobe. 2 King.
KE'EPER of the great seal. [custos magni sigilli, Latin.] Is a lord by his office, and called lord keeper of the great seal of England, &c. and is of the king's privy-council, under whose hands pass all charters, commissions, and grants of the king, strengthened by the great or broad seal, without which seal all such instruments by law are of no force; for the king is, in interpretation and intendment of law, a corporation, and therefore passeth nothing firmly, but under the great seal.
This lord keeper, by the statute of 5 Eliz. c. 18. hath the like jurisdiction, and all other advantages, as hath the lord chancellor of England. Cowell.

KE'EPERSHIP. n. f. [from keeper.] Office of a keeper.
The common goal of the shire is kept at Launceston:
this keepership is annexed to the constableness of the castle.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

KEG. n. f. [caque, French.] A small barrel, commonly used for a fifth barrel.

To KEMB. v. a. [comban, Saxon; kammen, German: now written, perhaps less properly, to comb.] To separate or disentangle by a denticulated instrument.

Yet are the men more loose than they,
More kemb'd and bath'd, and rubb'd and trim'd.
More sleek. Benj. Johnson.

Thy head and hair are sleek;
And then thou kemb'st the tuzzes on thy cheek. Dryden.
To KEN. v. a. [kenan, Saxon; kenan, Dutch, to know.]

1. To see at a distance; to discern.
At once as far as angels ken, he views

The dismal situation, waste and wild. Milton's Par. Lost.
The next day about evening we saw, within a kenning, before us thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land.
Bacon's New Atlantis.

If thou ken'st from far,
Among the Pleiads, a new-kindled star;
'Tis she that shines in that propitious light. Dryden.
We ken them from afar, the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms. Addison.

2. To know.
'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gate.

Sure he was born some bloody butcher's son,
Bred up in flames. Gay's Poet.

KEN. n. f. [from the verb.] View; reach of sight.
Lo! within a ken, our army lies. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
When from the mountain top Pifanio shew'd thee,
Thou wast within a ken. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
It was a hill

KER

Of paradise the highest; from whose top
The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken,
Stretch'd out to th' amplest reach of prospect, lay. Milton.
He soon

Saw within ken a glorious angel stand. Milton.
Rude, as their ships, was navigation then;
No useful compass or meridian known:
Coasting they kept the land within their ken,
And knew the North but when the pole-star shone. Dryd.

When we consider the reasons we have to think, that what lies within our ken is but a small part of the universe, we shall discover an huge abyss of ignorance. Locke.
KE'NNEL. n. f. [chenil, French.]

1. A cot for dogs.
A dog sure, if he could speak, had wit enough to describe his kenel. Sidney.

From forth the kenel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death. Shakespeare.
The dainties remain within their station, which, by reason of the naftiness of the beastly multitude, might be more fitly termed a kenel than a camp. Hayward.

2. A number of dogs kept in a kennel.
A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kenel of French curs. Shakespeare.

3. The hole of a fox, or other beast.
[Kenel, Dutch; chenil, Fr. canalis, Latin.] The water-
course of a street.

4. [Kenel, Dutch; chenil, Fr. canalis, Latin.] The water-
course of a street.
Bad humours gather to a bile; or, as divers kenels flow to one sink, so in short time their numbers increase. Hoy.

He always came in so dirty, as if he had been dragged through the kenel at a boarding-school. Arbutnot.
To KE'NNEL. v. n. [from kenel.] To lie; to dwell: used of beasts, and of man in contempt.

Yet, when they list, would creep,
If ought disturb'd their noise, into her womb,
And kenel there; yet there fill bark'd and howl'd Within, unien. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

Take up the rays of th' beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

KETTLE. n. f. [ceet, Saxon; ketel, Dutch.] A vessel in which liquor is boiled. In the kitchen the name of pot is given to the boiler that grows narrower towards the top, and of kettle to that which grows wider. In authors they are confounded.

The fire thus form'd, the fets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little teether shone. Dryden.

KETTLEDRAW. n. f. [kettle and draw.] A drum of which the head is spread over a body of brass.

As he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettledrum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

KEY. n. f. [ceg, Saxon.]

1. An instrument formed with cavities correspondent to the wards of a lock, by which the bolt of a lock is pushed forward or backward.

Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shakespeare, King Lear.

Poor key cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The glorious standard left to heav'n they spread,
With Peter's keys ennobled and his crown. Fairfax.

Yet some there be, that by due steps aspire
To lay their just hands on that golden key,
That opens the palace of eternity. Milton.

Conscience is its own counsellor, the sole master of its own secrets; and it is the privilege of our nature, that every man should keep the key of his own breast. South's Sermons.

Hecame, and knocking thrice, without delay
The longing lady heard, and turn'd the key. Dryden.

I keep her in one room, I lock it;
The key, look here, is in this pocket. Prior.

KIC

2. An instrument by which something is screwed or turned.
Hide the key of the jack. Swiss.

3. An explanation of any thing difficult.
An emblem without a key to't, is no more than a tale of a tub. L'Estrange.

These notions, in the writings of the ancients darkly delivered, receive a clearer light when compared with this theory, which represents every thing plainly, and is a key to their thoughts. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books. Locke.

4. The parts of a musical instrument which are struck with the fingers.

Pamela loves to handle the spinnet, and touch the keys. Pam.

5. [In music.] Is a certain tone whereto every composition, whether long or short, ought to be fitted; and this key is said to be either flat or sharp, not in respect of its own nature, but with relation to the flat or sharp third, which is joined with it. Harris.

Hippolita, I wou'd thee with my sword,
And won't thy love, doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling. Shakespeare.

But speak you with a sad brow? Or do you play the flouting Jack? Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song? Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing.

Not know my voice! Oh, time's extremity!
Hast thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue
In sev'n short years, that here my only son Knows not my feeble key of untun'd cares? Shakespeare.

6. [Kaye, Dutch; quai, French.] A bank raised perpendicular for the ease of lading and unlading ships.

A key of fire ran along the shore, Dryden.
And lighten'd all the river with a blaze.

KE'YAGE. n. f. [from key.] Money paid for lying at the key. Ainsworth.

KEYHOLE. n. f. [key and hole.] The perforation in the door or lock through which the key is put.

tier, that it galls his kibe. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

One boast of the cure, calling them a few kibes. Wife's.

KIBED. adj. [from kibe.] Troubled with kibes: as kibed heels.

To KICK. v. a. [kauchen, German; calco, Latin.] To strike with the foot.

He must endure and digest all affronts, adore the foot that kicks him, and kiss the hand that strikes him. South.

It anger'd Turenne once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.

Another, whose son had employments at court, that valued not, now and then, a kicking or a caning. Swift.

To KICK. v. n. To beat the foot in anger or contempt.
Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice, which I have commanded? 1 Sa. ii. 29.

Jethurun waxed fat and kicked. Deutr. xxxii. 15.

The doctrines of the holy Scriptures are terrible enemies to wicked men, and this is that which makes them kick against religion, and spurn at the doctrines of that holy book. Tillot.

KICK. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow with the foot.

What, are you dumb? Quick, with your answer, quick,
Before my foot salutes you with a kick. Dryden, Juvenal.

KICKER. n. f. [from kick.] One who strikes with his foot.

KICKSHAW. n. f. [This word is supposed, I think with truth, to be only a corruption of quelque chose, something; yet Milton seems to have understood it otherwise; for he writes it kick- shaw, and seems to think it used in contempt of dancing.]

1. Something uncommon; fantastical; something ridiculous.

Shall we need the monieurs of Paris to take our hopeful youth into their slight and prodigal custodies, and send them over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kick- shaws? Milton.

2. A dish so changed by the cookery that it can scarcely be known.

Some pigeons, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaw. Shakespeare, H. IV.

In wit, as well as war, they give us vigour;
Cressy was lost by kickshaws and soup-meagre. Fenton.

KICKSTICKSEY. n. f. [from kick and wince.] A made word in ridicule and disdain of a wife. Hammer.

steal children; to steal human beings.

KIDNAPPER. n. f. [from kidnap.] One who steals human beings.

The man compounded with the merchant, upon condition that he might have his child again; for he had smelt it out, that the merchant himself was the kidnapper. L'Estrange.

These people lye in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law. Spektator.

KIDNEY. n. f. [Etymology unknown.]

1. These are two in number, one on each side: they have the same figure as kidneybeans: their length is four or five fingers, their breadth three, and their thickness two: the right is under the liver, and the left under the spleen. The use of the kidneys is to separate the urine from the blood, which, by the motion of the heart and arteries, is thrust into the emulgent branches, which carry it to the little glands, by which the ferosity being separated, is received by the orifice of the little tubes, which go from the glands to the pelvis, and from thence it runs by the ureters into the bladder. Quincy.

A youth laboured under a complication of diseases, from his melancholy and kidneys. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. Race; kind: in ludicrous language.

Think of that, a man of my kidney; think of that, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

There are millions in the world of this man's kidney, that take up the same resolution without noise. L'Estrange.

KIDNEY-BEAN. n. f. [so named from its shape.]

Physicians chuse line which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not flacked. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

To KILNDRY. v. a. [kiln and dry.] To dry by means of a kiln.

The best way is to kilndry them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

KILT for kill.

KIMBO. adj. [a schembo, Italian.] Crooked; bent; arched.

The kimbo handles seem with bears-foot carv'd,

And never yet to table have been serv'd. Dryden's Virgil.

He observed them edging towards one another to whisper;

so that John was forced to fit with his arms a kimbo, to keep them asunder. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

KIN. n. f. [cynne, Saxon.]

1. Relation either of consanguinity or affinity.

You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin, and to a friend to their persons, not to their errors. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Th' unhappy Palamon,

Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free,

Without a crime, except his kin to me. Dryden.

2. Relatives; those who are of the same race.

Tumultuous wars

Shall kin with kin, and kin with kin confound. Shakespeare.

The father, mother, and the kin beside,

Were overborn by fury of the tide. Dryden.

3. A relation; one related.

Then is the soul from God; so pagans say,

Which saw by nature's light her heavenly kin,

Naming her kin to God, and God's bright ray;

A citizen of heav'n, to earth confin'd. Deviat.

4. The same general class, though perhaps not the same species; thing related.

And the ear-deaf'ning voice of the oracle,

Kin to Jove's thunder, to surpris'd my sense,

That I was nothing. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that which it discovers, being dissolved in a little hot water, is altogether differing from the stink of the other, being of kin to that of other alcalizate salts. Boyle.

5. A diminutive termination from kind, a child, Dutch: as, manikin, minikin.

KIND. adj. [from cynne, relation, Saxon.]

1. Benevolent; filled with general good-will.

By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done

To pluck me by the beard. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Some of the ancients, like kind hearted men, have talked much of annual refrigeriums, or intervals of punishment to the damned, as particularly on the great festivals of the resurrection and ascension. South's Sermons.

2. Favourable; beneficent.

He is kind to the unthankful and evil. Lu. vi. 35.

KIND. n. f. [cynne, Saxon.]

1. Race; general class. Kind in Teutonic English answers to genus, and sort to species; though this distinction, in popular language, is not always observed.

Thus far we have endeavoured in part to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kind. Hobbs.

As when the total kind

Of birds, in orderly array on wings,

Came summon'd over Eden, to receive

Their names of Thee. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. vi.

That both are animalia.

I grant; but not rationalia;

For though they do agree in kind,

Specific difference we find. Hudibras, p. 1.

God and nature do not principally concern themselves in the preservation of particulars, but of kinds and companies. South's Sermons.

He with his wife were only left behind

Of peris'd man; they two were human kind. Dryden.

I instance some acts of virtue common to Heathens and Christians; but I suppose them to be performed by Christians after a more sublime manner than ever they were among the Heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection. Arbut.

He,

KIN

He, with a hundred arts refin'd,

Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind. Pope.

2. Particular nature.

No human laws are exempt from faults, since those that have been looked upon as most perfect in their kind, have been found, upon enquiry, to have so many. Baker.

3. Natural state.

He did, by edict, give the goods of all the prisoners unto those that had taken them, either to take them in kind, or compound for them. Bacon's Henry VII.

The tax upon tillage was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decime, or tithes. Arbutnot on Coins.

4. Nature; natural determination.

The faithful shepherd peel'd me certain wands,

And in the doing of the deed of kind,

He stuck them up before the fullsome ewes. Shakespeare.

Some of you, on pure instinct of nature,

Are led by kind to admire your fellow-creature. Dryden.

5. Manner; way.

Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,

Or you shall hear in such a kind from me

As will displease you. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

This will encourage industrious improvements, because many will rather venture in that kind than take five in the hundred. Bacon's Essays.

6. Sort. It has a slight and unimportant sense.

Diogenes was asked, in a kind of scorn, what was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers? He answer'd, because the one knew what they wanted, the other did not. Bacon.

To KINDLE. v. a.

1. To set on fire; to light; to make to burn.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindles it and baketh bread. Is. xlv. 15.

I was not forgetful of those sparks, which some mens distempers formerly studied to kindle in parliaments. K. Charles.

If the fire burns vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled: there is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in it, kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled from the sun. South's Sermons.

2. To inflame the passions; to exasperate; to animate; to heat;

to fire the mind.

I've been to you a true and humble wife;

At all times to your will conformable:

Ever in fear to kindle your dislike. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

He hath kindled his wrath against me, and counteth me as one of his enemies. Job xix. 11.

Thus one by one kindling each other's fire,

'Till all inflam'd, they all in one agree. Daniel's Civ. War.

Each was a cause alone, and all combin'd

To kindle vengeance in her haughty mind. Dryden.

To KINDLE. v. n. [Kindle, Welsh; cynbelan, Saxon.]

1. To catch fire.

When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. Is. xlii. 2.

2. [From cognate, to bring forth, Saxon.]

Are you native of this place?

—As the coney that you see dwells where she is kindled. Shakespeare.

KINDLER. n. f. [from kindle.] One that lights; one who inflames.

Now is the time that takes their revels keep,

Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep. Gay.

KINDLY. adv. [from kind.]

1. Benevolently; favourably; with good will.

Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company. Shakespeare.

I sometime lay here in Corioli,

At a poor man's house: he us'd me kindly. Shakespeare. Coriol.

Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another. Ro. xii. 10.

His grief some pity, others blame;

The fatal cause all kindly seek. Prior.

Who, with less designing ends,

Kindlier entertain their friends;

With good words, and count'ance sprightly,

Strive to treat them all politely? Swift.

KINDLY. adj. [from kind; probably from kind the substantive.]

1. Homogeneous; congenial; kindred; of the same nature.

This competency I beseech God I may be able to digest into kindly juice, that I may grow thereby. Hammond.

These soft fires

Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat,

Of various influence, foment and warm,

Temper or nourish. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. iv.

2. The foregoing sense seems to have been originally implied by this word, but following writers, inattentive to its etymology, confounded it with kind.

3. Bland; mild; softening.

Through all the living regions do't thou move,

And scatter'st, where thou goest, the kindly seeds of love. Dryden.

KIN

Ye heav'n's, from high the dewy nectar pour,

KIN

KINOCUP. n. f. [king and cup.] A flower
June is drawn in a mantle of dark grafs green, and upon his head a garland of beets, kingpins, and maidenhair. Peach.
Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay.
KINODOM. n. f. [from king.]
1. The dominion of a king; the territories subject to a monarch.

You're welcome,
Most learned, reverend sir, into our kingdom. Shaksfp.
Moses gave unto them the kingdom of Sihon, king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og, king of Bashan. Num. xxxii.
2. A different class or order of beings. A word chiefly used among naturalists.

The animal and vegetable kingdoms are so nearly joined, that if you take the lowest of one, and the highest of the other, there will scarce be perceived any difference. Locke.
3. A region; a tract.

The wat'ry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia. Shaksfp. Merch. of Ven.
KINGFISHER. n. f. A species of bird.

When dew refreshing on the pasture fields
The moon bestows, kingfishers play on shore. May's Virgil.
Bitterns, herons, sea-gulls, kingfishers, and water-rats, are great enemies to fish. Mortimer's Husbandry.

KINGLIKE. adj. [from king.]
KINGLY. adj. [from king.]
1. Royal; sovereign; monarchical.

There will fit,
Ruling in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms. Shaksfp.
Yet this place

Had been thy kingly seat, and here thy race,
From all the ends of peopled earth, had come To reverence thee. Dryden's State of Innocence.
In Sparta, a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the ephori. Swift.

The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states. Swift.
2. Belonging to a king.

Why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch
A watch-cake to a common 'larum-bell? Shaksfp. H. IV.
Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand,
What husband in thy power I will command. Shaksfp.

3. Noble; august.
He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly entertainment, such a kingly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprizes. Sidney.
I am far better born than is the king;

More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts. Shaksfp.
KINGLY. adv. With an air of royalty; with superior dignity.
Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state

Inclin'd not. Milt. Parad. Lost.
His hat, which never vail'd to human pride,
Walker with reverence took, and laid aside;
Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod. Dunciad.

KINGSEVIL. n. f. [king and evil.] A scrofulous distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of the king.

Sore eyes are frequently a species of the kingsevil, and take their beginning from vicious humours inflaming the tunica adnata. Wifeman's Surgery.

KINGSHIP. n. f. [from king.] Royalty; monarchy.
They designed and proposed to me the new modelling of sovereignty and kingship, without any reality of power, or without any necessity of subjection and obedience. K. Charles.

We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the impotence, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted and opposed by them, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with the addition of that title which he passionately thirsted after. South.

KINGSPEAR. n. f. A plant.
The stalk is round, smooth, strong, and branchy; the leaves like those of a leek, but stronger and narrower: the flowers are divided commonly as far as the basis, naked, stel-lated, and embracing the ovary like a calyx: the apex of the ovary puts forth six stamens, and a long tube from the centre, which becomes a roundish fruit, carnos, triangular, divided into three partitions inclosing triangular seeds. Miller.

KINGSTONE. n. f. A fish.
KINGSFOLK. n. f. [kin and folk.] Relations; those who are of the same family.

Those lords, since their first grants of those lands, have bestowed them amongst their kinsfolk. Spenser.
My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends forgotten me. Job xix. 14.

KINSMAN. n. f. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.

KIT

The jury he made to be chosen out of their nearest kinsmen, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser.
Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
Whom kinsmen to the crown the heralds deem'd. Dryden.
Let me stand excluded from my right,
Robb'd of my kinsman's arms, who first appear'd in fight.

There is a branch of the Medicis in Naples: the head of it has been owned as a kinsman by the great dukes, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions. Addison on Italy.

KINSMAN. n. f. [kin and woman.] A female relation.
A young noble lady, near kinswoman to the fair Helen, queen of Corinth, was come thither. Sidney.

The duke was as much in love with wit as he was with his kinswoman. Dennis's Letters.
KIRK. n. f. [cynce, Saxon; xurixan.] An old word for a church, yet retained in Scotland.

Home they hasten the posts to night,
And all the kirk pillars ere day-light,
With hawthorn buds, and sweet eglantine. Spenser.

Nor is it all the nation hath these spots,
There is a church as well as kirk of Scots. Clarendon.
What one party thought to river by the Scots, that the other contemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. King Charles.

KIRTLE. n. f. [cynce, Saxon; xurixan.] An upper garment; a gown.
All in a kirtle of discoloured fay
He clothed was. Fairy Queen.

What stuff wilt thou have a kirtle of? Thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. Shaksfp.'s Henry IV.
Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,

In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Raleigh.
To KISS. v. a. [cusan, Welsh; xlw.]
1. To touch with the lips.

But who those ruddy lips can misf,
Which blest itself themselves do kiss. Sidney.
He took
The bride about the neck, and kiss her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd. Shak. Teming of the Shrew.

Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other. Shak. R. III.
2. To treat with fondness.

The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shak. H. VIII.

3. To touch gently.
The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shaksfp. Merch. of Venice.

KISS. n. f. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.
What fense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shaksfp. Othello.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss!
KISSER. n. f. [from kiss.] One that kisses.

KISSINGCRUST. n. f. [kissing and crust.] Crust formed where one loaf in the oven touches another.
These bak'd him kissingcrusts, and those Brought him small beer. King's Cookery.

KIT. n. f. [kites, Dutch.]
1. A large bottle. Skinner.
2. A small diminutive fiddle.
'Tis kept in a case fitted to it, almost like a dancing-master's kit. Grew's Museum.

3. A small wooden vessel, in which Newcastle salmon is sent up to town.

KITCHEN. n. f. [kegin, Welsh; keg, Flemish; cycene, Sax. cuisine, French; cucina, Italian; kyben, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.

These being culpable of this crime, or favourites of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass. Spenser.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hobbes.

He was taken into service in his court to a bafe office in his kitchen, so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown. Bacon.
We see no new built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

KITCHENGARDEN. n. f. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.
Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchengardens. Bacon.

A kitchengarden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery. Spektator.
KITCHENMAID. n. f. [kitchen and maid.] A cookmaid.
KITCHENSTUFF. n. f. [kitchen and stuff.] The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan. As

KNA

As a thrifty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barreling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year,
Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer. Donne.

Instead of kitchenstuff some cry
A gospel preaching ministry. Hudibras.
KITCHENWENCH. n. f. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery. Shaksfp.

Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench. Swift.
Roasting and boiling leave to the kitchenwench. Swift.
KITCHENWORK. n. f. [kitchen and work.] Cookery; work done in the kitchen.

KITE. n. f. [cýca, Saxon.]
1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.
Ravenous crows and kites. Shaksfp.'s Julius Caesar.

Fly o'er our heads. Shaksfp.
More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shaksfp. R. III.

The heron, when the fourth high, so as sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth winds; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather. Bacon.
A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.
Detested kite! thou liest. Shaksfp. King Lear.
3. A fictitious bird made of paper.

A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will madly burn, or childishly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Grov. of the Tongue.

KITTEN. n. f. [katten, Dutch.] A young cat.
That a mare will sooner drown than an horse is not experienced, nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps and kittens. Brown's Vulg. Err.

1. It was scratched in playing with a kitten. Wifeman.
Helen was just flipp'd into bed;
Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,
Away the kitten with them fled,
As fees belonging to her prey. Prior.

To KITTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.
So it would have done
At the same season, if your mother's cat
Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born. Shaksfp.

The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak, and the cat kitten'd in the hollow trunk of it. L'Estrange.
To KICK. v. n. [from kick.]
1. To make a small sharp noise.

2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer or steal away suddenly with a snatch.
To KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knapp, Erse.] To bite.

Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so as that knab and knay may be the same.
I had much rather lie knabbing crufts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares. L'Estrange.

An ass was withing, in a hard Winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grafs to knab upon. L'Estr.
KNACK. n. f. [enac, Welsh, fly knavery; cnapping, Irish, Sax.]
1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.
When I was young, I was wont
To load my the with knacks: I would have ranfack'd
The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it To her acceptance. Shaksfp. Winter's Tale.

For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know thou do'st but fi-h
That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success. Shaksfp.

This cap was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shaksfp.

But is't not presumption to write verse to you,
Who make the better poems of the two?
For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
Alas, what are they but poems in prose? Denham.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
A copper-plate, with almanacks
Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.

2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.
I'll teach you the knacks
Of eating of flax,
And out of their noses
Draw ribbands and posies. Ben. Johnson's Gypsies.

The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the deperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.

There is a certain knack in the art of conversation that gives a good grace to many things, by the manner and address of handling them. L'Estrange.

Knives, who in full assemblies have the knack
Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.
My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes another, about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

KNA

The dean was famous in his time,
And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.

3. A nice trick.
For how should equal colours do the knack?
Camelions who can paint in white and black? Pope.

To KNACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks.
KNA'CKER. n. f. [from knack.]
1. A maker of small work.

One part for plow-wright, cartwright, knacker, and smith.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. A ropemaker. [Reffio, Latin]
KNAC. n. f. [knag, a wart, Danish. It is retain'd in Scotland.]
A hard knot in wood.

KNAGGY. adj. [from knag.] Knotty; fet with hard rough knots.
KNAP. n. f. [cnap, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece;
cnap, Saxon, a protuberance.] A protuberance; a swelling prominence.

You shall see many fine feats set upon a knap of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathereth as in troughs. Bacon.
To KNAP. v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]

1. To bite; to break short.
He knapp'd the spear in funder. Common Prayer.
He will knap the spears a-pieces with his teeth. Mare.

2. [Knapp, Erse.] To strike so as to make a sharp noise like that of breaking.
Knapp a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the found of the tongs. Bacon's Natural Hist.

To KNAP. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.
I reduced shoulders to soon, that the standers-by heard them knap in before they knew they were out. Wifeman's Surgery.

To KNA'PPLE. v. n. [from knapp.] To break off with a sharp quick noise. Ainsworth.
KNA'PSACK. n. f. [from knappen, to eat.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.

The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, 'till
I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. King Charles.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are hedges in Summer, and barns in Winter to be found: I with my ena sack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel 'till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

KNA'PWEED. n. f. [jacca, Latin.]
This is one of the headed plants destitute of spines: the cup is squamose; the borders of the leaves are equal, being neither serrated nor indented: the florets round the border of the head are barren; but those placed in the center are succeeded each by one seed, having a down adhering to it. There are fifty species of this plant, thirteen of which grow wild in England, and the rest are exotics. Miller.

KNARE. n. f. [knar, German.] A hard knot.
A cake of turf lies baking on the ground,
And prickly stubs instead of trees are found;
Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old,
Headless the moss, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

KNAVE. n. f. [cnapa, Saxon.]
1. A boy; a male child.
2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.

For as the moon the eye doth please
With gentle beams not hurting fight,
Yet hath fir sun the greater praise,
Because from him doth come her light;
So if my man must praise have,
What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.

He cats and drinks with his domestic slaves;
A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.
Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knaves, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South's Sermon.

When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estrange.

An honest man may take a knave's advice;
But idiots only may be cozen'd twice.
See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Dryden.

4. A card with a soldier painted on it.
For 'twill return, and turn t' account,
If we are brought in play upon't,
Or but by casting knave get in,
What pow'r can hinder us to win? Hudibras.

KNAVERY. n. f. [from knave.]
1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villainy.
Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together. Shaksfp.

If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do't; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shaksfp. Winter's Tale.

KNE

- Here's the folly of the ass in trusting the fox, and here's the knavery of the fox in betraying the ass. L'Estrange.

What a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on me, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee? Shakespeare.
They told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread. Lu. xxiv. 35.
At nearer view he thought he knew the dead,
And call'd the wretched man to mind. Flatman.
Tell me how I may know him. Milton.

5. To be no stranger to.
What are you?
—A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shak. King Lear.
6. To converse with another sex.
And Adam knew Eve his wife. Gen. iv. 4.

7. To see with approbation.
They have reigned, but not by me; they have set a fei-nory over themselves, but I knew nothing of it. Hofea.

TO KNOW. v. n.
1. To have clear and certain perception; not to be doubtful.
I know of a surety that the Lord hath sent his angel, and delivered me out of the hand of Herod. Act. xii. 11.

2. Not to be ignorant.
When they know within themselves they speak of that they do not well know, they would nevertheless seem to others to know of that which they may not well speak. Bacon's Essay, N^o. 27.
Not to know of things remote, but know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom. Milton.
In the other world there is no consideration that will fling our consciences more cruelly than this, that we did wickedly, when we knew that have done better; and chose to make ourselves miserable, when we understood the way to have been happy. Tilley's Sermons.
They might understand those excellencies which they blindly valued, so as not to be farther imposed upon by bad pieces, and to know when nature was well imitated by the most able masters. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. To be informed.
The prince and Mr. Pons will put on two of our jerkins and aprons, and fir John must not know of it. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
There is but one mineral body, that we know of, heavier than common quicksilver. Boyle.

4. To know far. To have knowledge of. A colloquial expression.
He said the water itself was a good healthy water; but for the party that own'd it, he might have more difeases than he knew for. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

5. To Know of. In Shakespeare, is to take cognisance of; to examine.
Fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun,
For a yoke in shady cloister mew'd. Shakespeare.
KNOWABLE. adj. [from know.] Cognoscible; possible to be discovered or understood.
These are resolved into a confessed ignorance, and I shall not pursue them to their old asylum; and yet it may be, there is more knowable in these than in less acknowledged my-series. Glave's Scpf.

KNU

'Tis plain, that under the law of works is comprehended also the law of nature, knowable by reason, as well as the law given by Moses. Locke.

These two arguments are the voices of nature, the unanimous suffrages of all real beings and substances created, that are naturally knowable without revelation. Bentley.

KNOWER. n. f. [from know.] One who has skill or knowledge.
If we look on a vegetable as made of earth, we must have the true theory of the nature of that element, or we miserably fail of our scientific aspirations; and while we can only say 'tis cold and dry, we are pitiful knowers. Glave.
I know the respect and reverence which in this address I ought to appear in before you, who are a general knower of mankind and poetry. Southern.

KNOWING. adj. [from know.]
1. Skillful; well instructed; remote from ignorance.
You have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath our noble father slain, Pursu'd my life. Shak. Hamlet.
The knowings of these have of late reformed their hypothesis. Boyle.
What makes the clergy glorious is to be knowing in their profession, unpotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges. South.
The necessity of preparing for the offices of religion was a lesson which the mere light and dictates of common reason, without the help of revelation, taught all the knowing and intelligent part of the world. South's Sermons.
Gio Bellino, one of the first who was of any consideration at Venice, painted very drily, according to the manner of his time: he was very knowing both in architecture and perspective. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
All animals of the same kind, which form a society, are more knowing than others. Addison's Guardian.

2. Confiscious; intelligent.
Could any but a knowing prudent Cause
Begin such motions and assign such laws?
If the Great Mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.

KNOWING. n. f. [from know.] Knowledge.
Let him be so entertain'd as suits gentlemen of your knowing to a stranger of his quality. Shakespeare.

KNOWINGLY. adv. [from knowing.] With skill; with knowledge.
He knowingly and wittingly brought evil into the world.
More's Divine Dialogues.
They who before were rather fond of it than knowingly admired it, might defend their inclination by their reason. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
To the private duties of the closet he repaired, as often as he entered upon any business of consequence: I speak knowingly. Atterbury's Sermons.

KNOWLEDGE. n. f. [from know.]
1. Certain perception; indubitable apprehension.
Knowledge, which is the highest degree of the speculative faculties, consists in the perception of the truth of affirmative or negative propositions. Locke.

2. Learning; illumination of the mind.
Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakespeare.

3. Skill in any thing.
Do but say to me what I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest unto it. Shak. Merchant of Venice.

4. Acquaintance with any fact or person.
The dog straight fawn'd upon his master for old knowledge. Sidney.
That is not forgot,
Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge
I never in my life did look on him. Shakespeare's Rich. II.

5. Cognisance; notice.
Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger? Ruth ii. 10.
A state's anger should not take Knowledge either of fools or women. Ben. Johnson's Catil.

6. Information; power of knowing.
I pulled off my headpiece, and humbly entreated her pardon, or knowledge why she was cruel. Sidney.

TO KNOWLEDGE. v. a. [not in use.] To acknowledge; to avow.
The prophet Hofea tells us that God faith of the Jews,
they have reigned, but not by me; which proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not avow: for though they be ordained by his secret providence, yet they are not acknowledged by his revealed will. Bacon's holy War.

TO KNUBBLE. v. a. [knip'er, Danish.] To beat. Skinner.

KNU

KNUCKLE. n. s. [cnucle, Saxon; knockle, Dutch.]
 1. The joints of the fingers protuberant when the fingers close.
 Thus often at the Temple-flairs we've seen
 Two tritons, of a rough athletic mien,
 Sourly dispute some quarrel of the flood,
 With knuckles bruis'd, and face befear'd in blood. Garth.
 2. The knee joint of a calf.
 We find also that Scotch skink, which is a pottage of strong nourishment, is made with the knees and finews of beef, but long boiled: jelly also, which they used for a restorative, is chiefly made of knuckles of veal. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 3. The articulation or joint of a plant.
 Divers herbs have joints or knuckles, as it were stops in their germination; as gillyflowers, pinks, fennel, and corn. Bacon's Natural History.
 To KNU'CKLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To submit: I suppose from an odd custom of striking the under side of the table with the knuckles, in confession of an argumental defeat.
 KNU'CKLED. adj. [from knuckle.] Jointed.
 The reed or cane is a watry plant, and groweth not but in the water: it hath these properties, that it is hollow, and it is knuckled both stalk and root; that, being dry, it is more hard and fragile than other wood; that it putteth forth no boughs, though many stalks out of one root. Bacon's Nat. History.

 KNUFF. n. s. [perhaps corrupted from knave, or the same with cluff.] A lout. An old word preferred in a rhyme of prediction.
 The country knuff, Hob, Dick, and Hick,
 With clubs and clouted shoon,
 Shall fill up Duffendale
 With slaughtered bodies soon. Hayward.
 KNUR. } n. s. [knur, German.] A knot; a hard sub-KNURLE. } stance.
 The stony nodules found lodged in the strata, are called by the workmen knurs and knots. Woodward's Mat. Ess.
 Koned for knew.
 To KYD. v. n. [corrupted probably from cuſs, Saxon.] To know.
 But ah, unſt and worthless Colin Clout,
 That kydſt the hidden kinds of many a weed;
 Yet kydſt not one to cure thy fore heart root,
 Whose rankling wound as yet doth rifele bleed. Spenser.

MDCCLV.

L.

L, A liquid consonant, which preserves always the same sound in English. In the Saxon it was aspirated a lax, lof, loce, loxy, loby.
At the end of a monosyllable it is always doubled; as, hall's, fill, fill, except after a diphthong; as, fail, feel, weal, cool. In a word of more syllables it is written single; as, channel, canal, tendril. It is sometimes put before e, and founded feebly after it; as bible, title.

LA, interj. [corrupted by an effeminate pronunciation from lo.] See; look; behold.

La you! if you speak ill of the devil,
How he takes it at heart. Shakes. Twelfth Night.

LABDANUM, n. f. A resin of the softer kind, of a strong and not unpleasant smell, and an aromatick, but not agreeable taste. This juice exudates from a low spreading shrub, of the cistus kind, in Creta, and the neighbouring islands; and the Grecian women make balls of it with a small admixture of ambergrace, by way of a perfume. It was formerly used externally in medicine, but is now neglected. Hill.

TO LABEY, v. a. [labefacio, Latin.] To weaken; to impair. Diſt.

LABEL, n. f. [labelum, Latin.]

1. A small slip or scrip of writing.

When wak'd, I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing
Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. Any thing appendant to a larger writing.

On the label of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impressed from the papal seal. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In law.] A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending seal. So also any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or testament, is called a label or codicil. Harris.

God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;
And ere this hand by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both. Shakespeare.

LABENT, adj. [labens, Lat.] Sliding; gliding; slipping. Diſt.

LABIAL, adj. [labialis, Latin.] Uttered by the lips.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon's Natural History.

Some particular affection of sound in its passage to the lips, will seem to make some composition in any vowel which is labial. Heldt's Elements of Speech.

LABIATED, adj. [labium, Latin.] Formed with lips.

LABIODENTAL, adj. [labium and dentalis.] Formed or pronounced by the co-operation of the lips and teeth.

The dental consonants are very easy; and first the labiodentals f, v, also the linguadentals th, dh. Heldt's Elements of Speech.

LABORANT, n. f. [laborans, Lat.] A chemist. Not in use.

I can shew you a sort of fixt sulphur, made by an industrious laborant. Boyle.

LABORATORY, n. f. [laboratoire, French.] A chemist's work-room.

It would contribute to the history of colours, if chemists would in their laboratory take a heedful notice, and give us a faithful account, of the colours observed in the steam of bodies, either sublimed or distilled. Boyle on Colours.

The flames of love will perform those miracles they of the furnace boast of, would they employ themselves in this laboratory. Decay of Piety.

LABORIOUS, adj. [laboriosus, French; laboriosus, Latin.]

1. Diligent in work; assiduous.

That which makes the clergy glorious, is to be knowing in their professions, unspotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges, bold and resolute in opposing seducers, and daring to look vice in the face; and lastly, to be gentle, courteous, and compassionate to all. South's Sermon.

To his laborious youth consum'd in war,
And lasting age, adorn'd and crown'd with peace. Prior.

2. Requiring labour; tiresome; not easy.

A spacious cave within its farthest part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art. Dryd. Zen. 6.

Through the hill's hollow sides,
Do't thou love watchings, abstinence, and toil,
Laborious virtues all? learn them from Cato. Add. Cato.

LABORIOUSLY, adv. [from laborious.] With labour; with toil.

The folly of him, who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Piety.

I chuse laboriously to bear
A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air. Pope's Odes.

LABORIOUSNESS, n. f. [from laborious.]

1. Toilomeness; difficulty.

The parallel holds in the gainfulness as well as the laboriousness of the work; those wretched creatures, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the infatiate miser. Decay of Piety.

2. Diligence; assiduity.

LABOUR, n. f. [labour, French; labor, Latin.]

1. The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength, or wearisome perseverance; pains; toil; travail; work.

If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, it is labour well bestowed. Shakes. M. W. of Windsor.

I sent to know your faith, lest the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain. 1 Theſ. iii. 5.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hooker.

You were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Hercules
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband to much sweat. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Exercise; motion with some degree of violence.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and curing many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

4. Childbirth; travail.

Sith of women's labours thou hast charge,
And generation goodly doest enlarge,
Incline thy will to effect our wishful vow. Spens. Epith.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden swoonings, and of grinding pain;
My throws come thicker, and my cries encrease'd,
Which with her hand the conscious nurse suppress'd. Dryd.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour. Grant.

His heart is in continual labour; it even travails with the obligation, and is in pangs 'till it be delivered. South's Sermon.

TO LABOUR, v. n. [laboro, Latin.]

1. To toil; to act with painful effort.

When shall I come to th' top of that same hill?
— You do climb up it now; look how we labour. Shakes.

For your highness' good I ever labour'd,
More than mine own. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

— None but the fool, who labours to out-jest
His heart-struck injuries. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Let more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein. Exod. v. 9.

2. To do work; to take pains.

Epaphras saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect. Col. iv. 12.

A labouring man that is given to drunkenness shall not be rich. Ecclesi. xix. 1.

That in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day. Neb. iv. 22.

Yet is there no end of all his labours; neither faith he, for whom do I labour. Ecclesi. iv. 8.

LAD

Easy in words thy file, in sense sublime;
Tis like the ladder in the patriarch's dream,
Its foot on earth, its height above the skies.
Then took the help to her of a servant near about her husband, whom she knew to be of a halcyon ambition; and such a one, who wanting true sufficiency to raise him, would make a ladder of any mischief.

I must climb her window,
The ladder made of cords. Shakes. Two Gent. of Verona.
Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne. Shakes.
Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shakes.

3. A gradual rise.
Endow'd with all these accomplishments, we leave him in the full career of success, mounting fast towards the top of the ladder ecclesiastical, which he hath a fair probability to reach. Swift.

LADDER. n. f.
Lade is the mouth of a river, and is derived from the Saxon lade, which signifies a purging or discharging; there being a discharge of the waters into the sea, or into some greater river. Gilbert's Camden.

To LADE. v. a. preter. and part. passive, laded or laden. [from placen, Saxon.] It is now commonly written load.

1. To load; to freight; to burthen.
And they laded their asses with corn, and departed thence. Gen. xlii. 26.

The experiment which sheweth the weights of several bodies in comparison with water, is of use in lading of ships, and shewing what burthen they will bear. Bacon's Ph. Rem.

The vessels, heavy laden, put to sea
With propitious winds; a woman leads the way. Dryden.
Though the peripatetic doctrine does not satisfy, yet it is as easy to account for the difficulties he charges on it, as for those his own hypothesis is laden with. Locke.

2. To leave out; to throw out.
He chides the sea that sunders him from them,
Saying, he'll lade it dry to have his way. Shakes.

They never let blood; but say, if the pot boils too fast there is no need of lading out any of the water, but only of taking away the fire; and so they allay all heats of the blood by abstinence, and cooling herbs. Temple.

If there be firings in the slate marl, there must be help to lade or pump it out. Mortimer's Husband.

LA'DING. n. f. [from lade.] Weight; burthen.
Some we made prize, while others burnt and rent
With their rich lading to the bottom went. Waller.

The storm grows higher and higher, and threatens the utter loss of the ship: there is but one way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading overboard. South's Sermon.

It happened to be foul weather, so that the mariners cast their whole lading overboard to save themselves. L'Estrange.

Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?
His lading little, and his ballast less. Swift.

LA'DLE. n. f. [plæle, Saxon, from placan; leaugb, Erie.]
1. A large spoon; a vessel with a long handle, used in throwing out any liquid.

Some stir'd the molten ore with ladles great. Pa. Qu.
When the materials of glass have been kept long in fusion, the mixture casts up the superfluous salt, which the workmen take off with ladles. Boyle.

A ladle for our silver dish. Prior.

2. The receptacles of a mill wheel, into which the water falling turns it.

LA'DLE-FUL. n. f. [ladle and full.]
If a footman be going up with a dish of soup, let the cook with a ladle-ful dribble his livery all the way up stairs. Sto.

LADY. n. f. [playery, Saxon.]
1. A woman of high rank: the title of lady properly belongs to the wives of knights, of all degrees above them, and to the daughters of earls, and all of higher ranks.

I am much afraid, my lady, his mother, play'd false with a smith. Shakespeare's Merch. of Verona.

I would thy husband were dead; I would make thee my lady.

— I your lady, Sir John? alas, I should be a pitiful lady. Shakes. Merry Wives of Windsor.

I am sorry my relation to do deserv'd a lady, should be any occasion of her danger and affliction. K. Charles.

2. An illustrious or eminent woman.

O foolish! Fairy's fan, what fury mad
Hath thee incens'd to haste thy doleful fate?
Were it not better I that lady had,
Than that thou hadst repented it too late? Fairy Qu.

I love and hate her; for she's fair and royal,
And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite
Than lady ladies; winning from each one
The best she hath, and she of all compounded.
Out-fells them all. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Before Homer's time this great lady was scarce heard of. Rel.

LAG

May every lady an Evadne prove,
That shall divert me from Aspasia's love. Waller.
Shou'd I thun the dangers of the war,
With scorn the Trojans wou'd reward my pains,
And their proud ladies with their sweeping trains. Dryden.

We find on medals the representations of ladies, that have given occasion to whole volumes on the account only of a face. Addison on ancient Medals.

Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,
With shadowy forests, and with champaigns rich'd,
With plenteous rivers, and wide-skirted meads,
We make thee lady. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. A word of complaisance used of women.
That I some lady trifles have receiv'd,
Immortal toys, things of such dignity
As we greet modern friends withal. Shakes. Ant. and Cl.

I hope I may speak of women without offence to the dies. Guardian.

LA'DY-BEDSTRAW. n. f. [Gallium.] It is a plant of the fl-late kind; the leaves are neither rough nor knappy, and produced at the joints of the stalks, five or six in number, in a radiant form; the flower consists of one leaf, expanded toward the upper part, and divided into several segments; each of these flowers is succeeded by two dry seeds. Miller.

LA'DY-BIRD. n. f. A small red insect vaginopennous.
Fly lady-bird, north, south, or east or west,
Fly where the man is found that I love best. Gay's Poet.

This lady-fly take from off the grass,
Whose spotted back might scarlet red surpass. Gay.

LA'DY-DAY. n. f. [lady and day.] The day on which the annunciation of the blessed virgin is celebrated.

LA'DY-LIKE. adj. [lady and like.] Soft; delicate; elegant.
Her tender constitution did declare,
Too lady-like a long fatigue to bear. Dry. Hind and Panther.

LA'DY-MANTLE. n. f. [Alchimilla.] The leaves are serrated, the cup of the flower is divided into eight segments, expanded in form of a star; the flowers are collected into bunches upon the tops of the stalks; each seed vessel generally contains two seeds. Miller.

LA'DYSHIP. n. f. [from lady.] The title of a lady.
Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring. Shakespeare.

If they be nothing but mere statemen,
Your ladyship shall observe their gravity,
And their reservedness, their many cautions, Fitting their persons. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.

I the wronged pen to please,
Make it my humble thanks express
Unto your ladyship in these. Waller.

'Tis Galla; let her ladyship but peep. Dryden's Jew.

LA'DY-SLIPPER. n. f. [Calceolus.] It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of six dissimilar leaves, four of which are placed in form of a cross, the other two pass the middle, one of which is bifid, and rests on the other, which is swellings and shaped like a shoe; the empanement becomes a fruit open on three sides, to which adhere the valves, pregnant with very small seeds like dust.

LA'DY-SMUCK. n. f. [Cardamine.] The flower consists of four leaves succeeded by narrow pods, which when ripe roll up, and cast forth their seeds: the leaves for the most part are winged. The first fort is sometimes used in medicine; the third fort is a very beautiful plant, continuing a long time in flower: they are preserved in botanick gardens, and some of them merit a place in some shady part of every curious garden, for their odd manner of casting forth their seeds on the slightest touch when the pods are ripe. Miller.

When dazies pied, and violets blue,
And lady's-smocks all silver white,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakespeare.

See here a boy gathering lilies and lady-smocks, and there a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips, all to make gar-lands. Walton's Angler.

Lady's-smocks have small stringy roots that run in the grounds, and comes up in divers places. Mortimer's Husbandary.

LAG. adj. [leng, Saxon, long; lagg, Swedish, the end.]
1. Coming behind; falling short.

I could be well content
To entertain the lag end of my life
With quiet hours. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The slowest footed who come lag, supply the show of a rear-ward. Carew's Survey.

I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines lag of a brother. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. Sluggish; slow; tardy. It is retained in Scotland.
He, poor man, by your first order died;
And that a winged Mercury did bear;
Some tardy cripple had the countermand. Shakes. Rich. III.

That came too lag to see him buried. Shakes. Rich. III.

We know your thoughts of us, that laymen are lag souls, and rubbish of remaining clay, Which

LAM

Which heav'n, grown weary of more perfect work,
Set upright with a little puff of breath,
And bid us pass for men. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. Last; long delayed.
Pack to their old play-fellows; there I take
They may, cum privilegio, wear away
The lag end of their lewdness, and be laugh'd at. Shak.

LAG. n. f.
1. The lowest class; the rump; the rag end.

The rest of your foes, O gods, the senators of Athens, together with the common lag of people, what is amis in them, make suitable for destruction. Shakes. Tim. of Athens.

2. He that comes last, or hangs behind.
The last, the lag of all the race. Dryd. Virg. Æneis.

What makes my ram the lag of all the flock. Pope.

To LAG. v. n.
1. To loiter; to move slowly.

She pass'd, with fear and fury wild;
The nurse went lagging after with the child. Dryden.

The remnant of his days he safely pass'd,
Nor found they lagg'd too slow, nor flow'd too fast. Prior.

2. To stay behind; not to come in.
Behind her far away a dwarf did lag. Fairy Queen.

I shall not lag behind, nor cry
The way, thou leading. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

The knight himself did after ride,
Leading Crowdero by his side,
And tow'd him, if he lagg'd behind,
Like boat against the tide and wind. Hud. p. i. c. 3.

If he finds a fairy lag in light,
He drives the wretch before, and lashes into night. Dryd.

She hourly press'd for something new;
Ideas came into her mind
So fast, his lessons lagg'd behind. Swift.

with his performance, either of these are sufficient to effect a present liking. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

To LAMENT. v. n. [lamentor, Latin; lamentor, French.] To mourn; to wall; to grieve; to express sorrow.

The night has been unruly where we lay;
And chimney were blown down, and, as they say,
Lamentings heard 't' th' air, strange screams of death. Shak.

Ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice. John.

Jeremiah lamented for Josiah, and all the singing-men and women spake of Josiah in their lamentations. 2 Chron.

LAM

In their wailing they shall take up a lamentation for thee, and lament over thee. Ezek. xxxvii. 32.
Far less I now lament for one whole world
Of wicked sons destroy'd, than I rejoice
For one man found so perfect and so just,
That God vouchsafes to raise another world
From him. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi. l. 874.
TO LAMENT. v. a. To bewail; to mourn; to bemoan; to sorrow for.
Come, now tow'rs Chertsey with your holy land,
And fill, as you are weary of this weight,
Rest you, while I lament king Henry's corse. Shakespeare.
The pair of fates praise;
One pity'd, one contemn'd the woful times.
One laugh'd at follies, one lamented crimes. Dryden.
LAMENT. n. f. [lamentum, Latin, from the verb.]
1. Sorrow audibly expressed; lamentation; grief uttered in complaints or cries.
Long ere our approaching heard within Noise, other than the found of dance, or song!
Torment, and loud lament, and furious rage. Milton.
The loud laments arise,
Of one distress'd, and muffled mingled cries. Dryden.
2. Expression of sorrow.
To add to your laments,
Wherewith you now bedew king Henry's hearth,
I must inform you of a dismal fight. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
LAMENTABLE. adj. [lamentabilis, Latin; lamentable, French, from lament.]
1. To be lamented; causing sorrow.
The lamentable change is from the best;
The worst returns to laughter. Shakespeare, King Lear.
2. Mournful; sorrowful; expressing sorrow.

thens and them, flies to this lamentable refuge. Stillingfleet.
LAMENTABLY. adv. [from lamentable.]
1. With expressions or tokens of sorrow; mournfully.
The matter in itself lamentable, lamentably expressed by the old prince, greatly moved the two princes to compassion. Sidney, b. ii.
2. So as to cause sorrow.
Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinks most lamentably. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
3. Pitifully; despicably.
LAMENTATION. n. f. [lamentatio, Latin.] Expression of sorrow; audible grief.
Be't lawful that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shakespeare, R. III.
His sons buried him, and all Israel made great lamentation for him. Mac. ii. 10.
LAMENTATION. n. f. [from lament.] He who mourns or laments.
Such a complaint good company must pity, whether they think the lamentor ill or not. Speccator, N^o. 429.
LAMENTINE. n. f. A fish called a sea-cow or manatee, which is near twenty feet long, the head resembling that of a cow, and two short feet, with which it creeps on the shallows and eaten. Bailey.

LAMINA. n. f. [Lat.] Thin plate; one coat laid over another.
LAMINATED. adj. [from lamina.] Plated; used of such bodies whose texture discovers such a disposition as that of plates lying over one another.
From the apposition of different coloured gravel arises, for the most part, the laminated appearance of a stone. Sharp.
TO LAMM. v. a. To beat soundly with a cudgel. Dist.
LAMMAS. n. f. [This word is said by Bailey, I know not on what authority, to be derived from a custom, by which the tenants of the archbishop of York were obliged, at the time of masts, on the first of August, to bring a lamb to the altar. In Scotland they are said to wean lambs on this day.
It may else be corrupted from lattermath.] The first of August.
In 1578 was that famous lammas day, which buried the reputation of Don John of Austria. Bacon.
LAMP. n. f. [lampe, French; lampas, Latin.]
1. A light made with oil and a wick.
O thievish night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the flaps
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveler?
In lamp furnaces I used spirit of wine instead of oil, and with the same flame has melted foliated gold. Boyle.
2. Any kind of light, in poetical language, real or metaphorical.
Thy gentle eyes send forth a quick'ning spirit,
And feed the dying lamp of life within me. Rowe.

LAN

Cynthia, fair regent of the night,
O may thy silver lamp from heaven's high bow
Direct my footsteps in the midnight hour. Gay.
LANPASS. n. f. [lampas, French.] A lump of flesh, about the bigness of a nut, in the roof of a horse's mouth, which rises above the teeth. Farris's Dict.
His horse posset with the glanders, troubled with the lam-pass, infected with the fashions. Shakespeare.
LANPBLACK. n. f. [lamp and black.] It is made by holding a torch under the bottom of a basin, and as it is fired strike it with a feather into some shell, and grind it with gum water. Peachment on Drawing.
LAMPING. adj. [λαμπρυν.] Shining; sparkling.
Happy lines, on which with starry light
Those lamping eyes will deign sometimes to look. Spenser.
LAMPOON. n. f. [Bailey derives it from lampoon, a drunken song. It imports, let us drink, from the old French lampoon, and was repeated at the end of each couplet at carousals.
Trev.] A personal satire; abuse; censure written not to reform but to vex.
They say my talent is satire; if so, it is a fruitful age:
they have sown the dragon's teeth themselves, and it is but just they should reap each other in lampoons. Dryden.
Make satire a lampoon. Pope.
TO LAMPOON. v. a. [from the noun.] To abuse with personal satire.
LAMPONER. n. f. [from lampoon.] A scribbler of personal satire.
We are naturally displeased with an unknown critick, as the ladies are with a lampooner, because we are bitten in the dark. Dryden's Rn.
The squibs are those who are called libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers. Tatler, N^o. 88.
LAMPREY. n. f. [lamprey, French; lamprey, Dutch.]
Many fish much like the eel frequent both the sea and fresh rivers; as, the lamprel, lamprey, and lamperne. Walton.
LAMPRON. n. f. A kind of sea fish.
These rocks are frequented by lamprons, and greater fishes, that devour the bodies of the drowned. Notes on the Odyssey.
LANCE. n. f. [lance, French; lancea, Latin.] A long spear, which, in the heroic ages, seems to have been generally thrown from the hand, as by the Indians at this day. In later times the combatants thrust them against each other on horseback.
He carried his lances which were strong, to give a lanceoly blow. Sidney.
Plate fin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtles breaks: Shakespeare.
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it. Jer. l. 42.
TO LANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To pierce; to cut.
In fell motion,
With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lance'd my arm. Shakespeare.
In their cruel worship they lance themselves with knives. Clayton's Scip. c. 16.
Th' infernal minister advanc'd,
Seiz'd the due victim, and with fury lance'd
Her back, and piercing through her inmost heart, Drew backward. Dryden's Theod. and Honoria.
2. To open chirurgically; to cut in order to a cure.
We do lance
Diseases in our bodies. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rattle more Than when it bites, but lanceth not the force. Shakespeare.
That differs as far from our usual feverities, as the lancings of a physician do from the wounds of an adversary. D. of Ph.
LANCE. n. f. The fore,
And cut the head; for till the core is found
The secret vice is fed. Dryden's Georg. l. 691.
The shepherd stands,
And when the lancet knife requires his hands,
Vain help, with idle prayers, from heav'n demands. Dryden.
LANCELY. adj. [from lance.] Suitable to a lance. Not in use.
He carried his lances, which were strong, to give a lanceoly blow. Sidney, b. ii.
LANCEPESADE. n. f. [lance pеззате, French.] The officer under the corporal: not now in use among us.
To th' ladies of her arm he flies,
Fraught both with east and western prize,
Which, when he had in vain essay'd,
Arm'd like a dapper lancepessade. Clayton.
LANCEP. n. f. [lancette, French.] A small pointed surgical instrument.
I gave vent to it by an apertion with a lancet, and discharged white matter. Wifeman's Surgery.
It differeth from a vein, which in an apparent blue runneth along the body, and is dexterously pricked with a lancet emitteth a red drop. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
Hippocrates faith, blood-letting should be done with broad lancets.

LAN

lancets or swords, in order to make a large orifice: the manner of opening a vein then was by stabbing or pertusion, as in horses. Arbutnot on ancient Coins.
TO LANCER. v. a. [lancer, French.] This word is too often written launch: it is only a vocal corruption of lance.] To dart; to cast as a lance; to throw; to let fly.
See whole arm can lance the surer bolt, Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
And who's the better Jove. Dryden.
Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread that interdicted shore:
When Jove tremendous in the fable deeps,
Launch'd his red lightning at our scatter'd ships. Pope.
LANCINATION. n. f. [from lancina, Latin.] Tearing; laceration.
TO LANCINATE. v. a. [lancino, Latin.] To tear; to rend;
to lacerate.
LAND. n. f. [lans, Gothick; Saxon, and so all the Teuto-nick dialects.]
1. A country; a region; distinct from other countries.
All the nations of Scythia, like a mountain flood, did overflow all Spain, and quite drowned and washed away whatsoever reliques there were left of the land-bred people.
Spenser's State of Ireland.
Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
What had he done to make him fly the land? Shakespeare.
The chief men of the land had great authority; though the government was monarchical, it was not despotic.
Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
2. Earth; distinct from water.
The princes delighting their conceits with confirming their knowledge, seeing wherein the sea-discipline differed from the land-service, they had pleasing entertainment. Sidney.
He to-night hath boarded a land-carriage;
If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever. Shakespeare.
By land they found that huge and mighty country. Abbott.
With eleven thousand land-soldiers, and twenty-six ships of war, we within two months have won one town. Bacon.
Necessity makes men ingenious and hardy; and if they have but land-room or sea-room, they find supplies for their hunger. Hale's Origin of Manikind.
Yet, if thou go'st by land, tho' grief possess
My soul ev'n then, my fears would be the less:
But ah! be warn'd to shun the wat'ry way. Dryden.
They turn their heads to sea, their stems to land,
And greet with greedy joy th' Italian strand. Dryden.
I writ not always in the proper terms of navigation, or land-service. Dryden's Æneis.
The French are to pay the same duties at the dry ports through which they pass by land-carriage, as we pay upon importation or exportation by sea. Add. Freeholder.
The Phenicians carried on a land-trade to Syria and Mesopotamia, and stop't not short, without pushing their trade to the Indies. Arbutnot on Coins.
The species brought by land-carriage were much better than those which came to Egypt by sea. Arbutnot.
3. Ground; surface of the place. Unusual.
Beneath his stately caque he felt the blow,
And roll'd, with limbs relax'd, along the land. Pope.
4. An estate real and immovable.
To forfeit all your goods, lands, and tenements,
Castles, and goods whatsoever, and to be Out of the king's protection. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
He kept himself within the bounds of loyalty, and enjoyed certain lands and towns in the borders of Polonia. Knelles.
This man is freed from servile hands,
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall:
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all. Wotton.
5. Nation; people.
These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd. Dryden.
6. Urine. [Saxon.] As Probably this was a coarse expression in the cant strain, formerly in common use, but since laid aside and forgotten, which meant the taking away a man's life. For land or lent is an old word for urine, and to stop the common passages and functions of nature is to kill. Hammer.
You are abused, and by some putter on,
That will be damn'd for't; would I knew the villain,
I would land-damn him. Shakespeare, Winter Tale.
TO LAND. v. a. [from the noun.] To set on shore.
You shall hear
The legions, new in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not fearing Britain. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
I told him of the army that was landed;
He laughed at it. Shakespeare's King Lear.
He who rules the raging wind,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind,
Thy committed pledge restore,
And land him safely on the shore. Dryden's Heracle.

LAN

Another Typhis shall new seas explore,
Another Argo land the chiefs upon th' Iberian shore. Dryden.
TO LAND. v. n. To come to shore.
Let him land, Shakespeare, Hen. V.
And solemnly see him set on to London.
Land ye not, none of you, and provide to be gone from this coast within sixteen days. Bacon's New Atlantis.
I land, with luckless omens; then adore
Their gods. Dryden's Æneis.
LAND-FORCES. n. f. [land and force.] Warlike powers not naval; foldiers that serve on land.
We behold in France the greatest land-forces that have ever been known under any christian prince. Temple.
LAND'ED. adj. [from land.] Having a fortune, not in money but in land.
A landless knight makes thee a landed squire. Shakespeare.

The earl's servants foot ranged on both sides, and made the king a lane. Bacon's Henry VII.

LANE. n. f. A little hawk.

LANE. n. f. [language, French; lingua, Latin.]
1. Human speech.

We may define language, if we consider it more materially, to be letters, forming and producing words and sentences; but if we consider it according to the design thereof, then language is apt signs for communication of thoughts. Holder.

2. The tongue of one nation as distinct from others.

O! good my lord, no Latin;
I am not such a truant since my coming,
As not to know the language I have liv'd in. Shakes.

He not from Rome alone, but Greece,
Like Jason, brought the golden fleece;
To him that language, though to none
Of th' others, as his own was known. Denham.

3. Stile; manner of expression.

Though his language should not be refin'd,
It must not be obscure and impudent. Rescommen.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women, men, for dress:
Their praise is still—the stile is excellent;
The sense, they humbly take upon content. Pope.

LANQUAGED. adj. [from the noun.]
Having various languages,
He wand'ring long a wider circle made,
And many language'd nations has survey'd. Pope.

LANGUAGE-MASTER. n. f. [language and master.] One whose profession is to teach languages.

The third is a sort of language-master, who is to instruct them in the stile proper for a minister. Speator, N° 305.

LANGUID. adj. [languidus, Latin.]
1. Faint; weak; feeble.

Whatever renders the motion of the blood languid, dis-

LAN

poseth to an acid acrimony; what accelerates the motion of the blood, disposeth to an alkaline acrimony. Arbutnot.

No space can be assigned to vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion to swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. Bentley's Sermon.

2. Dull; heartless.

I'll hasten to my troops,
And fire their languid souls with Cato's virtue. Addison.

LANGUIDLY. adv. [from languid.] Weakly; feebly.

The menstrum work'd as languidly upon the coral, as it did before they were put into the receiver. Boyle.

LANGUIDNESS. n. f. [from languid.] Weakness; feebleness; want of strength.

LANGUISH. v. n. [languir, French; languere, Latin.]
1. To grow feeble; to pine away; to lose strength.

Let her languish
A drop of blood a-day; and, being aged,
Die of this folly. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

We and our fathers do languish of such diseases. 2 Eph.

What can we expect, but that her languishings should end in death. Decay of Piety.

His sorrows bore him off; and, softly laid
His languid limbs upon his homely bed. Dryden's Æn.

2. To be no longer vigorous in motion; not to be vivid in appearance.

The troops with hate inspir'd,
Their darts with clamour at a distance drive,
And only keep the languid war alive. Dryden's Æn.

3. To sink or pine under sorrow, or any slow passion.

What man who knows
What woman is, yea, what she cannot chuse
But must be, will his free hours languish out
For assur'd bondage. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

The land shall mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein languish. Hef. iv. 3.

I have been talking with a sutor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure. Shakes. Othello.

I was about fifteen when I took the liberty to chuse for myself, and have ever since languished under the displeasure of an inexorable father. Addison's Spectator, N° 181.

Let Leonora consider, that, at the very time in which the languish for the loss of her deceased lover, there are persons just perishing in a shipwreck. Addison's Spectator, N° 163.

4. To look with softness or tenderness.

Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark languish thus close up the flars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mild and lonely traveller. Milton.

Vice is like a dark languish, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand. Govern. Tong.

Judge what a ridiculous thing it were, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous eruptions of light, to prevent the art of the lantern-maker. Mare's Divine Dialogues.

There are at Paris, Madrid, Lisbon, Rome, great hospitals, in the walls of which are placed machines in the shape of large languishes, with a little door in the side of them. Addison.

Our ideas succeed one another in our minds, not much unlike the images in the inside of a languish, turned round by the heat of a candle. Locke.

2. A lighthouse; a light hung out to guide ships.

Caprea, where the languish fix'd on high
Shines like a moon through the benighted sky,
While by its beams the wary sailor steers. Addison.

LANE. n. f. A term used of a thin village, such as if a candle were burning in the mouth might transmit the light.

Being very lucky in a pair of long languish-jaws, he wrung his face into a hideous grimace. Addison's Spectator, N° 173.

LANQUOROUS. adj. [languosus, Latin.] Downy; covered with soft hair.

LAP. n. f. [leppe, Saxon; lappe, German.]
1. The loose part of a garment, which may be doubled at pleasure.

If a joint of meat falls on the ground, take it up gently, wipe it with the lap of your coat, and then put it into the dish. Swift's Directions to a Footman.

2. The part of the cloaths that is spread horizontally over the knees as one sits down, so as any thing may lie in it.

It feeds each living plant with liquid lap,
And fills with flowers fair Flora's painted lap. Spenser.

Upon a day, as love lay sweetly slumb'ring
All in his mothers lap,
A gentle bee, with his loud trumpet murr'm'ring,
About him flew by hap. Spenser.

I'll make my haven in a lady's lap,
And 'twixt sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakes.

All on the wanton ruffles lay you down,
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you. Shakes.

LANE. n. f. [lanicium, Latin.] Woollen manufacture.

The moth breedeth upon cloth and other lanes, especially if they be laid up dankish and wet. Bacon.

LANIGER. adj. [laniger, Latin.] Bearing wool. LANE.

LAP

LANE. adj. [lanicis, Dutch.]
1. Loose; not filled up; not stiffened out; not fat; not plump; slender.

The commons ha't thou rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lane and lean with thy extortions. Shakespeare.

Name not Winterface, whose skin's slack,
Lane, as an unthrif's purse. Dome.

We let down into the receiver a great bladder well tied at the neck, but very lane, as not containing above a pint of air, but capable of containing ten times as much. Boyle.

Moist earth produces corn and grass, but both
Too rank and too luxuriant in their growth.
Let not my land so large a promise boast,
Left the lane ears in length of stem be lost. Dryden.

Now, now my bearded harvest gilds the plain.
Thus dreams the wretch, and vainly thus dreams on,
Till his lane purse declares his money gone. Dryden.

Meagre and lane with fasting grown,
And nothing left but skin and bone;
They just keep life and soul together. Swift.

2. Milton seems to use this word for faint; languid.

He, piteous of her woes, rear'd her lane head,
And gave her to his daughters to imbathe
In nectar'd lavers strew'd with alphodill. Milton.

LANE. n. f. [from lane.] Want of plumpness.

LANE. n. f. [lanier, Fr. lanarius, Lat.] A species of hawk.

LANE. n. f. [lane and lane, Dutch.]

2. A game at cards.

LANE. n. f. [lanterne, French; laterna, Latin:] it is by mistake often written lanthorn.] A transparent case for a candle.

God shall be my hope,
My stay, my guide, my lanthorn to my feet. Shakes.

Thou art our admiral; thou bearest the lanthorn in the poop, but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art the knight of the burning lamp. Shakes. Henry IV. p. i.

A candle lasteth longer in a lanthorn than at large. Bacon.

Amongst the excellent acts of that king, one hath the pre-eminence, the erection and institution of a society, which we call Solomon's house; the noblest foundation that ever was, and the lanthorn of this kingdom. Bacon's Atlantis.

O thieves' night,
Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the flars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mild and lonely traveller. Milton.

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand. Govern. Tong.

Judge what a ridiculous thing it were, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous eruptions of light, to prevent the art of the lantern-maker. Mare's Divine Dialogues.

There are at Paris, Madrid, Lisbon, Rome, great hospitals, in the walls of which are placed machines in the shape of large lanthorns, with a little door in the side of them. Addison.

Our ideas succeed one another in our minds, not much unlike the images in the inside of a lanthorn, turned round by the heat of a candle. Locke.

2. A lighthouse; a light hung out to guide ships.

Caprea, where the lanthorn fix'd on high
Shines like a moon through the benighted sky,
While by its beams the wary sailor steers. Addison.

LANE. n. f. A term used of a thin village, such as if a candle were burning in the mouth might transmit the light.

Being very lucky in a pair of long lanthorn-jaws, he wrung his face into a hideous grimace. Addison's Spectator, N° 173.

LANQUOROUS. adj. [languosus, Latin.] Downy; covered with soft hair.

LAP. n. f. [leppe, Saxon; lappe, German.]
1. The loose part of a garment, which may be doubled at pleasure.

If a joint of meat falls on the ground, take it up gently, wipe it with the lap of your coat, and then put it into the dish. Swift's Directions to a Footman.

2. The part of the cloaths that is spread horizontally over the knees as one sits down, so as any thing may lie in it.

It feeds each living plant with liquid lap,
And fills with flowers fair Flora's painted lap. Spenser.

Upon a day, as love lay sweetly slumb'ring
All in his mothers lap,
A gentle bee, with his loud trumpet murr'm'ring,
About him flew by hap. Spenser.

I'll make my haven in a lady's lap,
And 'twixt sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakes.

The moth breedeth upon cloth and other lanes, especially if they be laid up dankish and wet. Bacon.

LANIGER. adj. [laniger, Latin.] Bearing wool. LANE.

LAP

Let us rear
The higher our opinion, that our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er-lust-wearied Antony. Shakes. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Heav'n's almighty fire
Melts on the bosom of his love, and pours
Himself into her lap in fruitful show'rs. Croshaw.

Men expect that religion should cost them no pains, and that happiness should drop into their laps. Tillotson.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid;
Then, helpless, in his mother's lap is laid.
He creeps, he walks, and issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began.

Retchless of laws, affects to rule alone,
Anxious to reign, and reflects on the throne. Dryden.

To LAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wrap or twist round any thing.

He hath a long tail, which, as he descends from a tree, he laps round about the boughs, to keep himself from falling. Grew's Museum.

About the paper, whose two halves were painted with red and blue, and which was stiff like thin pasteboard, I lapped several times a slender thread of very black silk. Newton.

2. To involve in any thing.

As through the flow'ring forest rash the fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. Spens.

The thane of Cawder 'gan a dismal conflict,
Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof, Confronted him. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me,
Ev'n in his garments, and did give himself,
All thin and naked, to the numb cold night. Shakespeare.

Ever against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs. Milton.

Indulgent fortune does her care employ,
And smiling, broods upon the naked boy;
Her garment spreads, and laps him in the folds,
And covers with her wings from nightly colds. Dryden.

Here was the repository of all the wife contentions for power between the nobles and commons, lapt up safely in the bosom of a Nero and a Caligula. Swift.

To LAP. v. n. To be spread or twisted over any thing.

The upper wings are opaque; at their hinder ends, where they lap over, transparent, like the wing of a fly. Grew.

To LAP. v. n. [lappian, Saxon; lappen, Dutch.] To feed by quick reciprocations of the tongue.

The dogs by the river Nilus' side being thirsty, lap hastily as they run along the shore. Digby on bodies.

They had soups served up in broad dishes, and so the fox fell to lapping himself, and bade his guest heartily welcome. L'Estrange, Fab. 31.

The tongue serves not only for tasting, but for mastication and deglutition, in man, by licking; in the dog and cat kind, by lapping. Ray on Creation.

To LAP. v. a. To lick up.

For all the reef
They'll take suggestion, as a cat laps milk. Shakespeare.

Upon a bull
Two horrid Lyons ramp't, and feis'd, and tugg'd off, bel-lowing fill, Chapman's Iliad, b. xviii.

Both men and dogs came; yet they tore the hide, and lapt their fill. Chapman's Iliad, b. xviii.

LAPDOG. n. f. [lap and dog.] A little dog, fondled by ladies in the lap.

One of them made his court to the lap-dog, to improve his interest with the lady. Collier.

These if the laws did that exchange afford,
Would fave their lap-dog sooner than their lord. Dryden.

Lap-dogs give themselves the rowling shake,
And sleepless lovers just at twelve awake. Pope.

LAPFUL. n. f. [lap and full.] As much as can be contained in the lap.

One found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild goards his lapful, and shred them into the pot of pottage. 2 Kings.

Will four per cent. increase the number of lenders? if it will not, then all the plenty of money these conjurers bestow upon us, is but like the gold and silver which old women believe other conjurers bestow by whole lapfuls on poor credulous girls. L'Estrange.

LAPICIDE. n. f. [lapicida, Latin.] A stonemason.

LAPIDARY. n. f. [lapidaire, Fr.] One who deals in stones or gems.

As a cock was turning up a dunghill, he espied a diamond: well (says he) this sparkling foolery now to a lapidary would have been the making of him; but, as to any use of mine, a barley-corn had been worth forty on't. L'Estrange.

Of all the many sorts of the gem kind reckoned up by the lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

LAP

To LAPIDATE. v. a. [lapido, Latin.] To stone; to kill by stoning. Diët.
 LAPIDATION. n. f. [lapidatio, Lat. lapidation, Fr.] A stoning.
 LAPIDÉOUS. adj. [lapideus, Latin.] Stony; of the nature of stone.

There might fall down into the lapiduous matter, before it was concentered into a stone, some small toad, which might remain there imprisoned, till the matter about it were condensed. Ray on Creation.

LAPIDESCENCE. n. f. [lapidesco, Latin.] Stony concretion. Of lapis ceratites, or cornu fossilis, in subterraneous cavities, there are many to be found in Germany, which are but the lapidescences, and putrefactive mutations, of hard bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 22.

LAPIDESCENT. adj. [lapidescent, Latin.] Growing or turning to stone.

LAPIDIFICATION. [lapidification, French.] The act of forming stones.

Induration or lapidification of substances more soft, is another degree of condensation. Bacon's Natural History.

LAPIDIFICK. adj. [lapidifick, French.] Forming stones.

The atoms of the lapidifick, as well as saline principle, being regular, do concur in producing regular stones. Grew.

LAPIDIST. n. f. [lapides, Latin.] A dealer in stones or gems.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, being exalted to that degree, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the facitious stores of chemists in imitation being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on Creation.

LAPIS. n. f. [Lapis, Latin.] A stone.

LAPIS LAZULI.

The lapis lazuli, or azure stone, is a copper ore, very compact and hard, so as to take a high polish, and is worked into a great variety of toys. It is found in detached lumps, usually of the size of a man's fist, of an elegant blue colour, beautifully variegated with clouds of white, and veins of a shining gold colour: that of Asia and Africa is much superior to the Bohemian or German kind: it has been used in medicine, but the present practice takes no notice of it: to it the painters are indebted for their beautiful ultra-marine colour, which is only a calcination of lapis lazuli. Hill.

LAPPER. n. f. [from lap.]

1. One who wraps up.

They may be lappers of linen, and bailiffs of the manor. Swift's Consideration on Two Bills.

2. One who laps or licks.

LAPPET. n. f. [diminutive of lap.] The parts of a head dress that hang loose.

How naturally do you apply your hands to each other's lappets, and ruffles, and mantuas. Swift.

LAPSE. n. f. [lapsus, Latin.]

1. Flow; fall; glide.

Round I saw

Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains, Milton.

And liquid laps of murrin ring streams.

Notions of the mind are preserved in the memory, notwithstanding laps of time. Hale's Original of Manind.

2. Petty error; small mistake.

These are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 13.

The weakness of human understanding all will confess; yet the confidence of most practically disowns it; and it is easier to persuade them of it from others lapses than their own. Glanville's Sep. c. 9.

This scripture may be usefully applied as a caution to guard against those lapses and failings, to which our infirmities daily expose us. Rogers's Sermon.

It hath been my constant business to examine whether I could find the smallest lapse in title or propriety through my whole collection, that I might find it abroad as the most finished piece. Swift.

3. Translocation of right from one to another.

In a presentation to a vacant church, a layman ought to present within four months, and a clergyman within six, otherwise a devolution, or lapse of right, happens. Ayliffe.

To LAPSE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To glide slowly; to fall by degrees.

This disposition to shorten our words, by retrenching the vowels, is nothing else but a tendency to lapse into the barbarity of those northern nations from whom we are descended, and whose languages labour all under the same defect. Swift's Letter to the Lord Treasurer.

2. To fall in any thing; to slip.

I have ever married my friends,

Of whom he's chief, with all the size that verity

Would without lapsing suffer. Shakef. Coriolanus.

To lapse in fulness

Is forer than to lie for need; and falsehood

Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakef. Cymbeline.

3. To slip by inadvertency or mistake.

Homer, in his characters of Vulcan and Thersites, has lapsed into the burlesque character, and departed from that serious air essential to an epic poem. Add. Spectator.

Let there be no wilful perversion of another's meaning;

no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable to play upon it. Watts.

3. To lose the proper time.

Myself stood out;

For which if I be lapsed in this place,

I shall pay dear. Shakefpeare's Twelfth Night.

As an appeal may be deferred by the appellant's lapses

the term of law, so it may also be deferred by a lapse of the term of a judge. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. To fall by the negligence of one proprietor to another.

If the archbishop shall not fill it up within six months en-franching, it lapses to the king. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To fall from perfection, truth or faith.

Once more I will renew

His lapsed powers, though forfeit, and intrinall'd

By sin to foul exorbitant desires. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Indeed the charge seems designed as an artifice of diversion, a sprout of that fig-tree which was to hide the nakedness of lapsed Adam. Decay of Piety.

All public forms suppose it the most principal, universal, and daily requisite to the lapsed state of human corruption. Decay of Piety.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great favorities of penance were prescribed them, as appears by the ca-mons of Ancyra. Stillingsfleet's Disc. on Romish Idolatry.

LAPWING. n. f. [lap and wing.] A clamorous bird with long wings.

Ah! but I think him better than I say,

And yet would herein others eyes were wofe:

Far from her nest the lapped cries away;

My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse. Shak.

And how in fields the lapped Tereus reigns,

The warbling nightingale in woods complains. Dryden.

LAPWORK. n. f. [lap and work.] Work in which one part is interchangeably wrapped over the other.

A basket made of porcupine quills: the ground is a pack-thread caul woven, into which, by the Indian women, are wrought, by a kind of lap-work, the quills of porcupines, not split, but of the young ones intire; mixed with white and black in even and indented waves. Grew's Myriodon.

LARBOARD. n. f.

The left-hand side of a ship, when you stand with your face to the head. Harvii.

Or when Ulysses on the larboard shunn'd

Charybdis, and by the other whirlpool steer'd. Milton.

Tack to the larboard, and stand off to sea,

Veer starboard sea and land. Dryden.

LARCENY. n. f. [larcin, Fr. larcin, Lat.] Petty theft.

Those laws would be very unjust, that should chastise murder and petty larceny with the same punishment. Spektat.

LARCH. n. f. [Larix.]

The larches, which are long and narrow, are produced out of little tubercles, in form of a painter's pencil, as in the cedar of Libanus, but fall off in winter; the cones are small and oblong, and, for the most part, have a small branch growing out of the top; these are produced at re-moote distances from the male flowers, on the same tree:

the male flowers are, for the most part, produced on the under side of the branches, and, at their first appearance, are very like small cones. Milton.

Some botanical critics tell us, the poets have not rightly followed the traditions of antiquity, in metamorphosing the sisters of Phaeton into poplars, who ought to have been turned into larch trees; for that it is this kind of tree which sheds a gum, and is commonly found on the banks of the

Po. Addison on Italy.

LARD. n. f. [lardum, Latin; lard, French.]

1. The grease of swine.

So may thy pastures with their flow'ry feasts,

As suddenly as lards, fat thy lean beasts. Donne.

2. Bacon; the flesh of swine.

By this the boiling kettle had prepar'd,

And to the table sent the smoking lard;

On which with eager appetite they dine,

A sav'ry bit, that serv'd to relish wine. Dryden's Ovid.

The sacrifice they sped;

Chopp'd off their nervous thighs, and next prepar'd

T' involve the lean in cauls, and mend with lard. Dryden.

To LARD. v. a. [lardo, French; from the noun.]

1. To stuff with bacon.

The larded thighs on loaded altars laid. Dryd. Homer.

No man lards salt pork with orange peel,

Or garnishes his lamb with spitcho-cock eel. King.

2. To fatten.

Now Falstaff sweats to death,

And lards the lean earth as he walks along. Shakef.

Brave soldiers, doth he lie

Larding the plain. Shakefpeare's Henry V.

3. To mix with something else by way of improvement.

I found, Horatio,

A royal knavery; an exact command,

Larded with many several sorts of reasons. Shakef. Hamlet.

Let

LAR

Let no alien interpose
 To lard with wit thy hungry Epion prose. Dryden.

He lards with flourish his long harangues,

'Tis fine, sayst thou. Dryd.

Sweating by heaven; the poets think this nothing, their plays are so much larded with it. Collier's View of the Stage.

LARDER. n. f. [lardier, old French; from lard.] The room where meat is kept or falced.

This similitude is not borrowed of the larder house, but out of the school house. Ajchom's Schoolmaster.

Flesh is ill kept in a room that is not cool; whereas in a cool and wet larder it will keep longer.

So have I seen in larder dark,

Of veal a lucid loin. Dorset.

Old age,

More, perverse in humour, diffident

The more he still abounds, the less content:

His larder and his kitchen too obtrives,

And now, lest he should want hereafter, starves. King.

LARDERER. [larder.] One who has the charge of the larder.

LARDON. n. f. [French.] A bit of bacon.

LARGE. adj. [large, French; largus, Latin.]

1. Big; bulky.

Charles II. asked me, What could be the reason, that in mountainous countries the men were commonly larger, and yet the cattle of all sorts smaller. Temple.

Great Theron fell,

Great Theron, large of limbs, of giant height. Dryden.

Warwick, Leicester, and Buckingham, bear a large, boned sleep of the best shape and deepest staple. Martinet's Hist.

2. Wide; extensive.

Their former large peopling was an effect of the countries improverishing. Corew's Survey of Cornwall.

Let them dwell in the land, and trade therein; for it is large enough for them. Gen. xxxiv. 21.

There he conquered a thousand miles wide and large.

3. Liberal; abundant; plentiful.

Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large. Ezek.

Vernal fons and showers

Diffuse their warmth, large influence. Thomson's Autumn.

4. Copious; diffuse.

Skippon gave a large testimony under his hand, that they had carried themselves with great civility. Clarendon, b. viii.

I might be very large upon the importance and advantages of education, and say a great many things which have been said before. Felton on the Classics.

5. At LARGE. Without restraint.

If you divide a cane into two, and one speak at the one end, and you lay your ear at the other, it will carry the voice further than in the air at large. Bacon's Nat. History.

Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms

Reduc'd their shapes immense; and were at large,

Though without number still. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The children are bred up in their father's way; or so plentifully provided for, that they are left at large. Sprat.

Your zeal becomes importunate;

I've hitherto permitted it to rave,

And talk at large; but learn to keep it in,

Lest it should take more freedom than I'll give it. Addif.

6. At LARGE. Diffusely.

Discover more at large what cause that was,

For I am ignorant, and cannot guess. Shakef. Henry VI.

It does not belong to this place to have that point debated at large. Watts.

LARGELY. adv. [from large.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; diffusely.

Where the author treats more largely, it will explain the shorter hints and brief intimations. Watts's Imp. on the Mind.

3. Liberally; bounteously.

How he lives and eats:

How largely gives; how splendidly he treats. Dryden.

Those, who in warmer climes complain,

From Phœbus rays they suffer pain,

Must own, that pain is largely paid

By gen'rous wines beneath the shade. Swift.

4. Abundantly.

They their fill of love, and love's disport

Took largely of their mutual guilt the seal. Milton.

LARGENESS. n. f. [from large.]

1. Bigness; bulk.

London excels any other city in the whole world, either in largeness, or number of inhabitants. Sprat's Sermons.

Not must Bumafus, his old honours lose,

In length and largeness like the dugs of cows. Dryden.

2. Greatness; elevation.

There will be occasion for largeness of mind and agreeable-

LAS

2. Wanton; soft; luxurious.
Grim visaged war hath sooth'd his wrinkl'd front;
And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute. Shakep. Rich. III.
- LASCIVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from lascivious.] Wantonness; looseness.
The reason pretended by Augustus was the lasciviousness of his elegies, and his art of love. Dryd. Preface to Ovid.
- LASCIVIOUSLY. adv. [from lascivious.] Leudly; wantonly; loosely.
- LASH. n. f. [The most probable etymology of this word seems to be that of Skinner, from schlagen, Dutch, to strike; whence slash and lash.]
1. A stroke with any thing pliant and tough.
From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of founding lashes, and of dragging chains. Dryden's Æn.
Rous'd by the lash of his own stubborn tail,
Our lion now will foreign foes assail. Dryden.
2. The thong or point of the whip which gives the cut or blow.
Her whip of cricket's bone, her lash of film,
Her waggoner a small grey-coated gnat. Shakepeare.
I observed that your whip wanted a lash to it. Addis. Spelt.
3. A lash, or string in which an animal is held; a snare: out of use.
The farmer they leave in the lash,
With losses on every side. Tupper's Husbandry.
4. A stroke of satire; a farcain.
The moral is a lash at the vanity of arrogating that to ourselves which succeeds well. L'Estrange.
- To LASH. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To strike with any thing pliant; to scourge.
Lucagus to lash his horses bends,
Prone to the wheels. Dryden.
Lets whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France. Shakep.
Let men out of their way lash on ever so fast, they are not at all the nearer their journey's end. South's Sermon.
He charg'd the flames, and those that disobey'd
He lash'd to duty with his sword of light. Dryden.
And limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Stem as tutors, and as uncles hard. Dryden's Horace.
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward.
Leaning on his lance he mounts his car,
His fiery couriers lashing through the air. Garth's Ovid.
2. To move with a sudden spring or jerk.
The club hung round his ears, and batter'd brows;
He falls; and lashing up his heels, his rider throws. Dryd.
3. To beat; to strike with a sharp sound.
The winds grow high,
Impending tempests charge the sky;
The lightning flies, the thunder roars,
And big waves lash the frighted shoars. Prior.
4. To scourge with satire.
Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain,
Flatrers and bigots ev'n in Louis' reign. Pope's Horace.
5. To tie any thing down to the side or malt of a ship.
To LASH. v. n. To ply the whip.
They lash aloud, each other they provoke,
And lend their little souls at every stroke. Dryden's Æn.
Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden's Persius.
Wheels clash with wheels, and bar the narrow street;
The lashing whip rebounds. Gay's Trivia.
- LASHER. n. f. [from lash.] One that whips or lashes.
- LASS. n. f. [from lad is formed laddys, by contraction lass.] A girl; a maid; a young woman: used now only of mean girls.
Now was the time for vigorous lads to show
What love or honour could invite them to;
A goodly theatre, where rocks are round
With reverend age, and lovely lasses crown'd. Waller.
A girl was worth forty of our widows; and an honest, downright, plain-dealing lass it was. L'Estrange.
They sometimes an hasty kiss
Steal from unwary lasses; they with scorn,
And neck reclin'd, resent. Philips.
- LA'SSITUDE. n. f. [lassitude, Latin; lassitude, French.] Weariness; fatigue.
Lassitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water; for all lassitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts; and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emolliation. Bacon's Natural History.
Affiduity in cogitation is more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude or distemper. Glanville, Scep. 14.
She lives and breeds in the air; for the largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. More's Antidote against Atheism.
Do not over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized

LAS

- with a lassitude, and thereby be temple to naughtiness, and grow tired. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.
- From mouth and throat the briny torrent ran,
And lost in lassitude lay all the man. Pope's Odyssey.
- Lassitude* generally expresses that weariness which proceeds from a distempered state; and not from exercise, which wants no remedy but rest: it proceeds from an increase of bulk, from a diminution of proper evacuation; or from too great a consumption of the fluid necessary to maintain the spring of the solids, as in fevers; or from a vitiated secretion of that juice, whereby the fibres are not supplied. Quincy.
- LA'SSIOR. n. f. [lass and tor.] Forsaken by his mistress.
Brown groves,
Whole shadow the dimm'd bachelor loves,
Being lassior. Shakepeare's Tempest.
- LAST. n. f. [Lazet, Saxon; laste, Dutch.]
1. Latest; that which follows all the rest in time.
I feel my end approach, and thus embrace'd;
Am pleas'd to die; but hear me speak my last. Dryden.
Here, last of Britons, let your names be read;
Are none, none living? let me praise the dead. Pope.
Wit not alone has shone on ages past,
But lights the present, and shall warm the last. Pope.
2. Hindmost; which follows in order of place.
Beyond which there is no more.
Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy to the last the kind releasing knell. Cowley.
The swans, that on Cayster often try'd
Their tuneful songs, now sing their last, and dy'd. Addis.
O! may fam'd Brunwick be the last,
The last, the happiest British king,
Whom thou shalt paint, or I shall sing. Addison.
But, while I take my last adieu,
Heave thou no sigh, nor shed a tear. Prior.
3. Utmost.
Fools ambitiously contend
For wit and pow'r; their last endeavours bend
To' outshine each other. Dryden's Lucretius.
4. At LAST. In conclusion; at the end.
Gad, a troop shall overcome him: but he shall overcome at the last. Gen. xlix. 19.
5. Thus weather-cocks, that for a while
Have turn'd about with ev'ry blast,
Grown old, and destitute of oil,
Rust to a point, and fix at last. Freind.
6. The LAST; the end.
All politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.
- LAST. adv.
1. The last time; the time next before the present.
How long is't now since I myself and I
Were in a mask. Shakepeare's Romeo and Juliet.
Just was the vengeance, and to last days
Shall long posterity rebound thy praise. Pope's Odyssey.
When last I dy'd, and, dear! I die
As often as from thee I go,
I can remember yet that I
Something did say, and something did bestow. Dante.
2. In conclusion.
Pleas'd with his idol, he commends, admires,
Adores; and last, the thing ador'd desires. Dryden.
- To LAST. v. n. [Lazran, Saxon.] To endure; to continue; to persevere.
All more lasting than beautiful.
I thought it agreeable to my affection to your grace, to prefix your name before the essays: for the Latin volume of them, being in the universal language, may last as long as books last. Bacon's Essays.
With several degrees of lasting, ideas are imprinted on the memory. Locke.
These are standing marks of facts delivered by those who were eye-witnesses to them, and which were contrived with great wisdom to last till time should be no more. Addison.
- LAST. n. f. [Lazet, Saxon.]
1. The mould on which shoes are formed.
The cobbler is not to go beyond his last. L'Estrange's Fab.
A cobbler produced several new grins, having been used to cut faces over his last. Addison's Spectator, N° 174.
Should the big last extend the shoe too wide,
Each stone would wrench th' unwary step aside. Gay.
2. [LAST, German.] A load; a certain weight or measure.
The bathful blood her snowy cheeks did spread,
That her became as polish'd ivory,
Which cunning craftsman's hand hath overlaid,
With fair vermilion, or pure lastery. Spenser's Fairy Queen.
- LAST'AGE. n. f. [lastage, French; lastage, Dutch; plays, Saxon, a load.]

Laz persons, married or unmarried, being doctors of the civil law, may be chancellors, officials, &c. Ayliffe's Parerg.
It might well startle

Our lay unlearned faith. Roswell's Ambitious Step Mother.

LA'ZER, n. f. [from lay.]
1. A stratum, or row; a bed; one body spread over another. A layer of rich mould beneath, and about this natural earth to nourish the fibres. Evlyn's Kalendar.

The terrestrial matter is disposed into strata or layers, placed one upon another, in like manner as any earthy sediment, settling down from a flood in great quantity, will naturally be. Woodward's Natural History.

2. A sprig of a plant.
Many trees may be propagated by layers: this is to be performed by flitting the branches a little way, and laying them under the mould about half a foot; the ground should be first made very light, and after they are laid, they should have a little water given them: if they do not comply well in the laying of them down, they must be pegged down with a hook or two; and if they have taken sufficient root by the next winter, they must be cut off from the main plants, and planted in the nursery: some twist the branch, or bare the rind; and if it be out of the reach of the ground, they fasten a tub or basket near the branch, which they fill with good mould, and lay the branch in it. Miller.

Transplant also carnation seedlings, give your layers fresh earth, and set them in the shade for a week. Evlyn's Kal.

3. A hen that lays eggs.
The oldest are always reckoned the best layers, and the youngest the best layers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LA'YMAN, n. f. [lay and man.]
1. One of the people distinct from the clergy.
Laymen will neither admonish one another themselves, nor suffer ministers to do it. Government of the Tongue.

Since a trust must be, the thought it be left
To put it out of laymen's pow'r at least,
And for their solemn vows prepar'd a priest. Dryden.

Where can be the grievance, that an ecclesiastical landlord should expect a third part value for his lands, his title as antient, and as legal, as that of a layman, who is seldom guilty of giving such beneficial bargains. Swift.

2. An image.
You are to have a layman almost as big as the life for every figure in particular, besides the natural figure before you. Dryden's Dufresny.

LA'YSTALL, n. f. An heap of dung.
Scarcely could he footing find in that foul way,
For many corfcs, like a great lay-stall.

Of murdered men, which therein strew'd lay. Fa. Q.
LA'ZAR, n. f. [from Lazarus in the gospel.] One deformed and nauseous with filthy and pestiferous diseases.

They ever after in most wretched case,
Like loathsome lazars, by the hedges lay. Fairy Queen.
I'll be sworn and sworn upon't, the never shrow'd any but lazars. Shakspeare's Troil. and Cressida.

I am weary with drawing the deformities of life, and lazars of the people, where every figure of imperfection more resembles me. Dryden's Aurengzeb.

Life he labours to refine
Daily, nor of his little stock denies Fit alms, to lazars, merciful, and meek. Philips.

LAZAR-HOUSE, n. f. [lazaret, French; lazaretto, Italian; LAZARE'TTO, } from lazars.] A house for the reception of the diseased; an hospital.

A place
Before his eyes appear'd, sad, noisome, dark,
A lazars-house it seem'd, where were laid Numbers of all diseases. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

LA'ZARWORT, n. f. A plant.
LA'ZILY, adv. [from lazily.] Idly; sluggishly; heavily.

and see whether he be stirring and active, or whether he lazily and listlessly dreams away his time. Locke.

The eastern nations view the rising fires,
Whilst night shades us, and lazily retires. Creech.

LA'ZINESS, n. f. [from lazily.] Idleness; sluggishness; heaviness to action.

That instance of fraud and laziness, the unjust steward, who pleaded that he could neither dig nor beg, would quickly have been brought both to dig and to beg too, rather than starve. South's Sermons.

My fortune you have rescued, not only from the power of others, but from my own modesty and laziness. Dryden.

LA'ZING, adj. [from lazily.] Sluggish; idle.
The hands and feet mutinied against the belly: they knew no reason, why the one should be lazings, and pampering itself with the fruit of the other's labour. L'Estrange.

The sot cried, Utinam hoc esset laborare, while he lay lazings and lolling upon his couch. South's Sermons.

LA'ZULI, n. f.
The ground of this stone is blue, veined and spotted with white, white, and a glittering or metallick yellow: it appears to be composed of, first, a white sparry, or crystalline matter; secondly, flakes of the golden or yellow tale; thirdly, a shining yellow substance; this fumes off in the calcination of the stone, and casts a sulphureous smell; fourthly, a bright blue substance, of great use among the painters, under the name of ultramarine; and when rich, is found, upon trial, to yield about one-sixth of copper, with a very little silver. Woodward's Metallick Effluvia.

LA'ZY, adj. [This word is derived by a correspondent, with great probability, from a Tajse, French; but it is however Teutonic: lifer in Danish, and lofigh in Dutch, have the same meaning; and Spelman gives this account of the word: Dividebantur antiqui Saxones, ut testatur Niithardus, in tres ordines: Edhilingos, Frilingos & Lazzos; hoc est nobiles, ingenuos & serviles: quam & nos distinctionem diu retinimus. Sed Ricardo autem secundo pars servorum maxima se in libertatem vindicavit; sic ut hodie apud Anglos rarior invenitur servus, qui mancipium dicitur. Restat nihilominus antiquæ appellationis commemoratio. Ignavos enim hodie lazios dicimus.]

1. Idle; sluggish; unwilling to work.
Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy flight,
On like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fall gently down, as if they struck their friends. Shakspeare.

Wicked condemned men will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy, and spend victuals. Bacon.
Whole lazy waters without motion lay. Rekommon.

The lazy glutton fate at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and batten with his sleep. Dryden.
Like Eastern kings a lazy state they keep,
And close confin'd in their own palace sleep. Pope.

What amazing stupidity is it, for men to be negligent of salvation themselves? to sit down lazy and unactive. Rogers.

2. Slow; tedious.
The ordinary method for recruiting their armies, was now too dull and lazy an expedient to resist this torrent. Clarendon.

LEA, n. f. [ley, Saxon; a fallow; leaz, Saxon, a pasture.] Ground inclosed, not open.

Greatly agast with this pitious plea;
Him reflect the good man on the lea. Spens. Pastoral.
Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas
Of wheat, rye, barley, fetches, oats and peas. Shakspeare.

Her fallow leas
The daniel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon. Shakspeare's Henry V.

Dry up thy harrow'd veins, and plough-torn leas,
Whereof ingratul man with liquorish draughts,
And mortels unctuous, greates his pure mind. Shakspeare.

Such court guile,
As Mercury did first devise,
With the miming Dryades,
On the lawns, and on the leas. Milton.

LEAD, n. f. [laez, Saxon.]

1. Lead is the heaviest metal except gold; for, though it is considerably lighter than quicksilver, as this wants malleability, it ought not to be reckoned in the class of metals. Lead is the softest of all the metals, and very ductile, though less so than gold: it is very little subject to rust, and the least sonorous of all the metals except gold. The specific gravity of lead is to that of water as 11322 to 1000. Lead, when kept in fusion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except Mercury, which will not bear that degree of heat: it afterwards vitrifies with the baser metals, and carries them off, in form of scories, to the sides of the vessel. The weakest acids are the best solvents for lead: it dissolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as also in vinegar. Gold, or silver, or copper, become brittle on being mixed with lead in fusion; and, if lead and tin be melted together, the tin is thrown up to the surface in little dusty globes. Lead is found in various countries, but abounds particularly in England, in several kinds of soils and stones. The smoke of the lead works at Mendip in Somersetshire is a prodigious annoyance, and subjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal disease; trees that grow near them have their tops burnt, and their leaves and outides discoloured and scorched. Hill.

Thou art a foul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakspeare's King Lear.
Of lead, some I can shew you to like steel, and so unlike common lead ore, that the workmen call it steel ore. Boyle.
Lead is employed for the refining of gold and silver by the cupel; hereof is made common cerus with vinegar; of cerus, red lead; of plumbum ustum, the best yellow ochre; of lead, and half as much tin, folder for lead. Greuv.

[In the plural.] Flat roof to walk on.
Stalls, bulks, windows,
Are smother'd up leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakespeare's Henry V.
A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weights, if it be proportionable, strengthen the sinews by contracting them. In leaping with weights the arms are first cast backwards and then forwards with so much the greater force; for the hands go backward before they take their rise. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
In a narrow pit
He saw a lion, and leap'd down to it. Cowley's Davideis.
Thrice from the ground the leap'd, was seen to wield
Her brandish'd lance. Dryden's Æn.
2. To rush with vehemence.
God changed the spirit of the king into mildness, who in a fear leaped from his throne, and took her in his arms, till she came to herself again. Eph. xiv. 8.
After he went into the tent, and found her not, he leaped out to the people. Judith xiv. 17.
He ruin upon ruin heaps,
And on me, like a furious giant, leaps. Sandys.
Strait leaping from his horse he rais'd me up. Rowe.
3. To bound; to spring.
Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy. Luke vi. 23.
I am warm'd, my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.
4. To fly; to start.
He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntman that has gall'd him;
Then makes him nothing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out. Job xli. 19.
- TO LEAP. v. a.
1. To pass over, or into, by leaping.
Every man is not of a constitution to leap a gulf for the saving of his country. L'Estrange.
As one condemn'd to leap a precipice,
Who sees before his eyes the depth below,
Stops short. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
She dares pursue, if they dare lead:
As their example still prevails,
She tempts the stream, or leaps the pales. Prior.
2. To comprehs; as beasts.
Too soon they must not feel the sting of love:
Let him not leap the cow. Dryden's Georg.
- LEAP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Bound; jump; act of leaping.
2. Space pass'd by leaping.
After they have carried their riders safe over all leaps, and through all dangers, what comes of them in the end but to be broken-winded. L'Estrange.
3. Sudden transition.
Wickedness comes on by degrees, as well as virtue; and sudden leaps from one extreme to another are unnatural. L'Estrange's Fables.
The commons wrestled even the power of chusing a king intirely out of the hands of the nobles; which was so great a leap, and caused such a convulsion in the state, that the constitution could not bear. Swift.
4. An assault of an animal of prey.
The cat made a leap at the mouse. L'Estrange.
5. Embrace of animals.
How the cheats her bellowing lovers eye;
The rushing leap, the doubtful progeny. Dryden's Æn.

6. Hazard, or effect of leaping.
Methinks, it were an easy leap
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon. Shak.
You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Behold that dreadful downfall of a rock,
Where yon old fisher views the waves from high!
'Tis the convenient leap I mean to try. Dryd. The Critic.
LEAP-FROG. n. f. [leap and frog.] A play of children, in which they imitate the jump of frogs.
If I could win a lady at leap-frog, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakespeare's Henry V.

LEAP-YEAR. n. f.
Leap-year or bissextile is every fourth year, and so called from its leaping a day more than year than in a common year: so that the common year hath 365 days, but the leap-year 366; and then February hath 29 days, which in common years hath but 28. To find the leap-year you have this rule:

Divide by 4; what's left shall be
For leap-year 0; for past 1, 2, 3. Harris.
That the sun consisteth of 365 days and almost six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted will, in process of time, largely deprave the compute; and this is the occasion of the bissextile or leap-year. Brown's Vulg. Err.
TO LEARN. v. a. [learn, man, Saxon.]
1. To gain the knowledge or skill of.
Learn a parable of the fig-tree. Mat. xxiv. 32.
He, in a shorter time than was thought possible, learned both to speak and write the Arabian tongue. Knolles.
Learn, wretches! learn the motions of the mind,
And the great moral end of humankind. Dryd. Persius.
You may rely upon my tender care,
To keep him far from perils of ambition:
All he can learn of me, will be to weep! A. Philips.
2. To teach. [It is observable, that in many of the European languages the same word signifies to learn and to teach; to gain or impart knowledge.]

He would learn
The lion stoop to him in lowly-wife,
A lesson hard. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i.
You taught me language, and my profit on't
Is, I know not how to curse: the red plague rid you,
For learning me your language. Shakespeare's Tempest.
A thousand more mischances than this one,
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently. Shakespeare.
Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Ye might learn in us not to think of men above that which is written. 1 Cor. iv. 6.

TO LEARN. v. n. To take pattern.
Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly. Mat. xi. 29.
In imitation of sounds, that man should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another. Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 237.

LEARNED. adj. [from learn.]
1. Versed in science and literature.
It is indifferent to the matter in hand, which way the learned shall determine of it. Locke.
Some by old words to fame have made pretence:
Such labour'd nothings, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile. Pope.
The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach. Swift.
The best account is given of them by their own authors:
but I trust more to the table of the learned bishop of Bath. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. Skilled; skilful; knowing.
Though train'd in arms, and learn'd in martial arts,
Thou chusest not to conquer men but hears. Granville.
3. Skilled in scholastic knowledge.
Till a man can judge whether they be truths or no, his understanding is but little improved: and thus men of much reading are greatly learned, but may be little knowing. Locke.
LEARNEDLY. adv. [from learned.] With knowledge; with skill.

Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all Was either pitted in him, or forgotten. Shakespeare's H. VIII.
The apostle seemed in his eyes but learnedly mad. Hooker.
Ev'ry coxcomb wears as learnedly as they. Swift.

LEARNING. n. f. [from learn.]
1. Literature; skill in languages or sciences; generally scholastic knowledge.
Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish; then its youth, when luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when solid; and, lastly, its old age, when dry and exhausted.
To tongue or pudding thou hast no pretence,
Learning thy talent is, but mine is sense. Prior.
As Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, so it is manifest from this chapter, that St. Paul was a great master in all the learning of the Greeks. Bentley's Sermon.

2. Skill in any thing good or bad.
An art of contradiction by way of scorn, a learning where with we were long thence forewarned, that the miserable times whereunto we are fallen should abound. Hooker.
LEARNER. n. f. [from learn.] One who is yet in his rudiments; one who is acquiring some new art or knowledge.
The late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix. Bacon.
Nor can a learner work so cheap as a skilful practised artist can. Grant's Bill of Mortality.

LEASE. n. f. [latifere, French. Spelman.]
1. A contract by which, in consideration of some payment, a temporary possession is granted of houses or lands.
Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease. Shakespeare.
Lords of the world have but for life their leases. Denham.
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease.
I have heard a man talk with contempt of bishops' leases, as on a worse foot than the rest of his estate. Swift.
2. Any tenure.
Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Thou to give the world increase,
Short'n'd hast thy own life's lease. Milton.
TO LEASE. v. a. [from lease.] To let by lease.
Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tithes to the rector or impropriator, and the small tithes to the vicar. Ayliffe's Paragon.
TO LEASE. v. n. [lisen, Dutch.] To glean; to gather what the harvest men leave.
She in harvest us'd to lease;
But harvest done, to chafe-work did aspire,
Meat, drink, and two-pence, was her daily hire. Dryden.
LEASER. n. f. [from lease.] Gleaner; gatherer after the reaper.
There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of leasers and gleaners. Swift.
LEASH. n. f. [lisse, French; lese, Dutch; laccio, Italian.] A leather thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a courser leads his greyhound. Hammer.
Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
What I was, I am;
More straining on, for plucking back; not following
My leash unwillingly. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
The ravished soul being flown such game, would break those leashes that tie her to the body. Boyle.

2. A tierce; three.
I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by their Christian names. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Some thought when he did gabble
Th'ad heard three labourers of Babel,
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once. Hudibras, p. i.
3. A band wherewith to tie any thing in general.
Thou art a living comedy; they are a leash of dull devils. Dennis's Letters.
TO LEASH. v. a. [from lease.] To bind; to hold in a string.
Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels,
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment. Shakespeare's Henry V.
LEASHING. n. f. [leash, Saxon.] Lies; falsehood.
O ye sons of men, how long will ye have such pleasure in vanity, and seek after leashing? Psal. iv. 2.
He 'mongst ladies would their fortunes read
Out of their hands, and merry leashings tell. Hud. Tale.
He hates foul leashings and vile flattery,
Two filthy blots in noble gentery. Hubbard's Tale.
That false pilgrim which that leashing told,
Was indeed old Archimago. Spenser's Fairy Queen.
I have ever married my friends
With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stamp'd the leashings. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
As folks, quoth Richard, prone to leashings,
Say things at first, because they're pleasing;
Then prove what they have once asserted,
Nor care to have their lie defected:
Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.
Trading free shall thrive again,
Nor leashings lead affright the wain. Gay's Pastoral.

That peace; Oh happy shade, be ever thine. Dryden.
9. To give up; to resign.
Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Lev. xix. 10.
If a wife man were left to himself, and his own choice, to with the greatest good to himself he could devise; the sum of all his wishes would be this, That there were just such a being as God is. Tillotson's Sermon 1.
10. To permit without interposition.
Whether Esau were a vassal, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

11. To cease to do; to desist from.
Let us return, lest my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us. 1 Sam. ix. 5.
12. To leave off. To desist from; to forbear.
If, upon any occasion, you bid him leave off the doing of any thing, you must be sure to carry the point. Locke.
In proportion as old age came on, he left off fox-hunting. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 115.
13. To leave off. To forsake.
He began to leave off some of his old acquaintance, his roaring and bullying about the streets; he put on a serious air. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
14. To leave out. To omit; to neglect.
My good Camillo;
I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Shua they to treat with me too?
No good lady,
You may partake: I have told 'em who you are.
I should be loth to be left out, and here too. Ben. Johnson.
What is set down by order and division doth demonstrate, that nothing is left out or omitted, but all is there. Bacon.
Beside till utmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere nice morn on the Indian steep
From her cabin'd loop-hole peep.
We ask, if whole subvert
Reason's establish'd maxims, who assert
That we the world's existence may conceive,
Though we one atom out of matter leave. Blackmore.
I always

LEC

I always thought this passage left out with a great deal of judgment, by Tucca and Varius, as it seems to contradict a part in the sixth Æneid. Addison in Italy.

To LEAVE. v. n.

1. To cease; to desert.

She is my effence, and I leave to be, If I be not by her fair influence Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakespeare.

And since this business so far fair is done, Let us not leave till all our own be won. Shakespeare, H. IV.

He began at the eldest, and left at the youngest. Genes.

2. To LEAVE off. To desert.

Gruttus, hoping that they in the castle would not hold out, left off to batter or undermine it, wherewith he perceived he little prevailed. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

But when you find that vigorous heat abate, Leave off, and for another summons wait. Rescommon.

3. To LEAVE off. To stop.

Wrongs do not leave off there where they begin, But still beget new mischiefs in their course. Daniel.

To LEAVE. v. a. [from levy, French.] To levy; to raise: a corrupt word, made, I believe, by Spenser, for a rhyme.

An army strong the leave'd, To war on those which him had of his realm bereav'd. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii.

LE'AVED. adj. [from leaves, of leaf.]

1. Furnished with foliage.

2. Made with leaves or folds.

I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates. Isa. xlv. i.

LE'AVEN. n. f. [levain, French; leaven, Latin.]

1. Ferment mixed with any body to make it light; particularly used of four dough mixed in a mass of bread.

It shall not be baken with leaven. Lev. vi. 17.

All fermented meats and drinks are easily digested, and those unfermented, by barm or leaven, are hardly digested. Floper.

2. Any mixture which makes a general change in the mass.

Many of their prophecies favour very strong of the old leaven of innovations. King Charles.

To LE'AVEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ferment by something mixed.

You must tarry the leav'ning. Shakespeare, Troil. and Crisida.

Whoever catch leavened bread, that soul shall be cut off. Exod. xii. 17.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings, and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites. Bacon's Atlantis.

2. To taint; to imbue.

That cruel something unpossest, Corrodes and leavens all the rest. Prior.

LE'AVEN. n. f. [leaven.] One who deserts or forsakes.

Let the world rank me in register A master-leaver, and a fugitive. Shakespeare.

LEAVES. n. f. The plural of leaf.

Parts fit for the nourishment of man in plants are, seeds, roots, and fruits; for leaves they give no nourishment at all. Bacon's Natural History.

LE'AVINGS. n. f. [from leave.] Remnant; relics; offal: it has no singular.

My father has this morning call'd together, To this poor hall, his little Roman senate, The leavings of Pharalia. Addison's Cato.

Then who can think we'll quit the place, Or stop and light at Cloe's head, With traps and leavings to be fed. Swift.

LE'AWY. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves; covered with leaves.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel tree, A garland made on temples for to wear, For he then chosen was the dignity Of village lord that Whitontide to bear. Sidney.

Now, near enough: your leavy screens throw down, And show like those you are. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To LECH. v. a. [lecher, French.] To lick over. Hammer.

Haft thou yet leched the Athenian's eyes With the love juice. Shakespeare, Midsummer Night's Dream.

LE'CHER. n. f. [Derived by Skinner from luxuria, old French: luxuria is used in the middle ages in the same sense.] A whore-matter.

I will now take the lecher; he's at my house; he cannot escape me. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shakespeare.

The lecher soon transforms his miter; now In his place appears a lovely cow. Dryden.

The lecher thrusts his little eyes, About his churning chaps the frothy bubbles rise. Dryden.

To that fair lecher, the strong god of arms. Pope's Ody.

To LE'CHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To whore.

Die for adultery? no. The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly does lecher in my sight. Shakespeare, King Lear.

LEE

Gut eats all day, and leches all the night. B. Johnson.

LE'CHEROUS. adj. [from lecher.] Leud; lustful.

The sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous; the emerald should fly to pieces, if it touch the skin of any unchaste person. Darham.

LE'CHEROUSLY. adv. [from lecherous.] Leudly; lustfully.

LE'CHEROUSNESS. n. f. [from lecherous.] Leudness.

LE'CHERY. n. f. [from lecher.] Leudness; lust.

The rest welter with as little shame in open lechery, as swine do in the common mire. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Against such leudsters, and their lechery, Those that betray them do no treachery. Shakespeare.

LE'CTION. n. f. [lectio, Lat.] A reading; a variety in copies.

Every critic has his own hypothesis: if the common text be not favourable to his opinion, a various lection shall be made authentic. Watts's Logic.

LE'CTURE. n. f. [lecture, French.]

1. A discourse pronounced upon any subject.

Mark him, while Dametas reads his rustick lecture unto him, how to feed his beasts before noon, and where to shade them in the extreme heat. Sidney, b. ii.

Wrangling pedant, When in music we have spent an hour, Your lecture shall have leisure for as much. Shakespeare.

When letters from Cesar were given to Ruficus, he refused to open them till the philosopher had done his lectures. Taylor's Holy Living.

Virtue is the solid good, which tutors should not only read lectures and talk of, but the labour and art of education should furnish the mind with, and fasten there. Locke.

Numidia will be blest by Cato's lectures. Addison's Cato.

2. The act or practice of reading; perusal.

In the lecture of holy scripture, their apprehensions are commonly confined unto the literal sense of the text. Brown.

3. A magisterial reprimand.

To LE'CTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct formally.

2. To instruct insolently and dogmatically.

LE'CTURER. n. f. [from lecture.] An instructor; a teacher by way of lecture; a preacher in a church hired by the parish to assist the rector or vicar.

If any minister refused to admit into his church a lecturer recommended by them, and there was not one orthodox or learned man recommended, he was presently required to attend upon the committee. Clarendon.

LE'CTURESHIP. n. f. [from lecture.] The office of a lecturer.

He got a lectureship in town of sixty pounds a year, where he preached constantly in person. Swift.

LED. part. pret. of lead.

Then shall they know that I am the Lord your God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen. Ezek. xxxix. 28.

The leaders of this people caused them to err, and they that are led of them are destroyed. Isa. ix. 16.

As in vegetables and animals, so in most other bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we most fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

LEDGE. n. f. [leggen, Dutch, to lie.]

1. A row; layer; stratum.

The lowest ledge or row should be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar: a general caution for all parts in building contiguous to board. Watson's Architecture.

2. A ridge rising above the rest.

The four parallel sticks rising above five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side. Gulliver.

3. Any prominence, or rising part.

Beneath a ledge of rocks his fleet he hides, The bending brow above, a safe retreat provides. Dryden.

LEHORSE. n. f. [led and horse.] A sumpter horse.

LEE. n. f. [lis, French.]

1. Dress; sediment; refuse.

My cloaths, my sex, exchange'd for thee, I'll mingle with the people's wretched lee. Prior.

2. [Sea term; supposed by Skinner from leem, French.] It is generally that side which is opposite to the wind, as the lee shore is that the wind blows on. To be under the lee of the shore is to be close under the weather shore. A leeward ship is one that is not fast by a wind, to make her way to ship is one that all her sails may lie against the masts and stowards flat, so that all her sails may lie against the masts and stowards flat, and the wind to come right on her broadside, so that the will make little or no way.

If we, being storm-beaten in the bay of Biscay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our transporting ships with our men of war, we had taken the Indian fleet, and the Azores. Raleigh's Apology.

The Hollanders were wont to ride before Dunkirk with the wind at north west, making a lee shore in all weathers. Raleigh's Apology.

Unprovided of tackling and victualling, they are forced to sea by a storm; yet better do so than venture splitting and sinking on a lee shore. King Charles.

LEE

Him, haply slumbering on the Norway foam; The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff, Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell, With fix'd anchor in his scaly rind, Moors by his side under the lee, while night Invests the sea. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

Batter'd by his lee they lay, The passing winds through their torn canvases play. Dryden.

LEECH. n. f. [leech, Saxon.]

1. A physician; a professor of the art of healing; whence we still use covleech.

A leech, the which had great insight In that disease of griev'd conscience, And well could cure the fame; his name was patience. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i.

Her words prevail'd, and then the learned leech His cunning hand 'gan to his wounds to lay, And all things else the which his art did teach. Pu. Qu.

Physick is their bane.

The learned leech in despair departs, And shake their heads, depending of their art. Dryden.

Wife leeches will not vain receipts obtrude: Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill. Dryden.

Till some safe crisis.

The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd and toil'd, Tried every health restoring herb and gum, And wearied out his painful skill in vain. Roscoe's J. Shore.

A skilful leech, They say, had wrought this blessed deed; This leech Arbuthnot was yelet. Gay's Pastorals.

2. A kind of small water serpent, which fastens on animals, and sucks the blood: it is used to draw blood where the lancet is less safe, whence perhaps the name.

I drew blood by leeches behind his ear. Wise's Surg.

Sticking like leeches, till they burst with blood, Without remorse insatiably. Rescommon.

To LEech. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with medicines.

LE'CHERAST. n. f. [leech and craft.] The art of healing: We study speech, but others we peruse: We lecherast learn; but others cure with it. Davies.

LEE'F. adj. [leef, leef, Dutch.] Kind; fond.

Whom all these were low and leef, And lov'd their flocks to feed; They never strove to be the chief, And simple was their weed. Spenser's Pastorals.

LEEK. n. f. [leac, Saxon; leek, Dutch; leek, Erie.]

Its flower consists of six pedals, and is shaped, as it were, like a bell; in the center arises the point, which afterward becomes a roundish fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds: to these notes may be added, the flaments, of which the middle one is furnished with a chive; the flowers are also gathered into almost globular bunches: the roots are long, cylindrical; and coated, the coats ending in plain leaves. Miller.

Know'st thou Floulen? — Yes.

Tell him I'll knock his leek about his pate; Upon St. David's day. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Leek to the Welsh, to Dutchmen butter's dear. Gay.

We use acid plants inwardly and outwardly in gangreens; in the scurvy, water-cresses, horse-radish, garlic, or leek pottage. Floyer on Humours.

LEER. n. f. [pleine, facies, Saxon.]

1. An oblique view.

I spy entertainment in her: she gives the leer of invitation. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Aside the devil turn'd For envy, yet with jealous leer malign Ey'd them apace. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.

2. A laboured cast of countenance.

Damn with faint praise, concede with civil leer, I place a statesman full before my fight; A bloated monster in all his gear, With shameless visage, and peridious leer. Swift.

To LEER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To look obliquely; to look archly.

I will leer upon him as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

I wonder whether you take the pleasure of independency, or whether you do not sometimes leer upon the court. Swift.

2. To look with a forced countenance.

Betran has been taught the arts of courts, To gild a face with smiles, and leer a man to ruin. Dryden.

LEES. n. f. [lis, French.] Dress; sediment: it has seldom a singular.

This proceeded by reason of the old humour of these countries, where the memory of King Richard was so strong, that it lay like lees in the bottom of mens hearts; and if the vessel was but stirred, it would come up. Bacon's Henry VII.

If they love lees, and leave the luty wine, Envy them not their palates with the twine. B. Johnson.

LEG

Those lees that trouble it refine The agitated soul of generous wine. Dryden.

To LEESE. v. a. [lefen, Dutch.] To lose: an old word.

Then fell to thy profit both butter and cheefe, Who buieth it sooner the more he shall leese. Tusser.

No cause, nor client fat, will Chev'ril leese, But as they come on both sides he takes fees; And pleath both: for while he melts his grease For this, that wins for whom he holds his peace. B. Johnson.

How in the port our fleet dear time did leese, Withering like prisoners, which lie but for fees. Donne.

LEET. n. f.

Leet, or leas, is otherwise called a law-day. The word seemeth to have grown from the Saxon lede, which was a court of jurisdiction above the wapentake or hundred, comprehending three or four of them, otherwise called thrifling, and contained the third part of a province or shire: these jurisdictions, one and other, be now abolished, and swallowed up in the county court.

Who has a breast so pure, But some uncleanly apprehensions Keep leets and law-days, and in sessions sit With meditations lawful. Shakespeare's Othello.

You would present her at the leet, Because she bought stone jugs, and no feal'd quarts. Shakespeare.

LE'WARD. adj. [lee and peap, Saxon.]

1. Towards the wind. See LEE.

The classice were called long ships, the onerarie round, because of their figure approaching towards circular: this figure, though proper for the stowage of goods, was not the fittest for sailing, because of the great quantity of leeward way, except when they failed full before the wind. Arbuth.

Let no statesman dare, A kingdom to a ship compare; Left he should call our commonweal A vessel with a double keel; Which just like ours, new rigg'd and man'd, And got about a league from land, By change of wind to leeward ride, The pilot knew not how to guide. Swift.

LE'FT. participle pret. of leave.

Alas, poor lady! desolate and left; I weep myself to think upon thy words. Shakespeare.

Had such a river as this been left to itself, to have found its way out from among the Alps, whatever windings it had made, it must have formed several little seas. Addison.

Were I left to myself, I would rather aim at instructing than diverting; but if we will be useful to the world, we must take it as we find it. Addison's Spectator, N. 179.

LE'FT. adj. [lufte, Dutch; levus, Latin.] Sinistrous; not right.

That there is also in men a natural prepotency in the right, we cannot with constancy affirm, if we make observation in children, who permitted the freedom of both hands, do oftentimes confine it unto the left, and are not without great difficulty restrained from it. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

The right to Pluto's golden palace guides, The left to that unhappy region tends, Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryden's Æn.

The gods of greater nations dwell around, And, on the right and left, the palace bound; The commons where they can. Dryden.

A raven from a wither'd oak, Left of their lodging was oblig'd to croak; That omen lik'd him not. Dryden.

The left foot naked when they march to fight, But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right. Dryden.

The limbs are used most on the right-side, whereby custom helpeth; for we see, that some are left-handed, which are such as have used the left-hand most. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

For the seat of the heart and liver on one side, whereby men become left-handed, it happeneth too rarely to countenance an effect so common: for the seat of the liver on the left-side is very monstrous. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Although a quaint left-handedness B' ungracious; yet we cannot want that hand. Donne.

LEG. n. f. [leg, Danish; legur, Mahdick.]

1. The limb by which we walk; particularly that part between the knee and the foot.

They haile; and what their tardy feet deny'd, The rusty staff, their better leg, supply'd. Dryden.

Purging comfits, and ants eggs, Had almost brought him off his legs. Hudibras.

Such intrigues people cannot meet with, who have nothing but legs to carry them. Addison's Guardian.

2. An

LEG

2. An act of obsequence.
At court, he that cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.
Their horses never give a blow, Hudibras, p. iii.
But when they make a leg, and bow. Hudibras, p. iii.
If the boy should not put off his hat, nor make legs very gracefully, a dancing-master will cure that defect. Locke.
He made his leg, and went away. Swift.
3. To stand on his own legs; to support himself.
Persons of their fortune and quality could well have stood upon their own legs, and needed not to lay in for countenance and support. Collier of Friendship.
4. That by which any thing is supported on the ground: as, the leg of a table.
LEGACY. n. f. [legatum, Latin.]
Legacy is a particular thing given by last will and testament.
If there be no such thing apparent upon record, they do as if one should demand a legacy by force and virtue of some written testament, wherein there being no such thing specified, he pleadeth that there it must needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good-will which always the testator bore him; imagining, that theft, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it, which other men can no where by reading find. Hooker, b. iii.
Go you to Caesar's house;
Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies. Shakesp. J. Caesar.
Good counsel is the best legacy a father can leave a child. L'Estrange's Fables.
When he thought you gone
To augment the number of the blest above,
He deem'd 'em legacies of royal love;
Nor arm'd, his brothers portions to invade,
But to defend the present you had made. Dryden.
When the heir of this vast treasure knew,
How large a legacy was left to you,
He wisely ty'd it to the crown again. Dryden.
Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.
- LEGAL. adj. [legal, French; leges, Latin.]
1. Done or conceived according to law.
Whatever was before, was before time of memory; and what is since is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale's Hist. of the Common Law of England.
2. Lawful; not contrary to law.
His merits
To save them, not their own, though legal, works. Milt.
LEGALITY. n. f. [legalité, French.] Lawfulness.
To LEGALIZE. v. a. [legaliser, French; from legal.] To authorize; to make lawful.
If any thing can legalize revenge, it should be injury from an extremely obliged person: but revenge is so absolutely the peculiar of heaven, that no consideration can empower, even the best men, to assume the execution of it. South's Sermons.
LEGALLY. adv. [from legal.] Lawfully; according to law.
A prince may not, much less may inferior judges, deny justice, when it is legally and competently demanded. Taylor.
- LEGATARY. n. f. [legataire, French; from legatum, Latin.] One who has a legacy left.
An executor shall exhibit a true inventory of goods, taken in the presence of fit persons, as creditors and legataries are, unto the ordinary.
LEGATINE. adj. [from legatus.] Made by a legate.
When any one is absolved from excommunication, it is provided by a legatine constitution, that some one shall publish such absolution. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. Belonging to a legate of the Roman see.
All those you have done of late,
By your power legatine within this kingdom, Shakesp. Lear.
Fall in the compass of a premonition.
LEGATE. n. f. [legatus, Latin; legat, French; legato, Italian.]
1. A deputy; an ambassador.
The legates from th' Ætolian prince return:
Sad news they bring, that after all the cost,
And care employ'd, their embassy is lost. Dryden. Æneis.
2. A kind of spiritual ambassador from the pope; a commissioner deputed by the pope for ecclesiastical affairs.
Look where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of heav'n. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Upon the legate's summons, he submitted himself to an examination, and appeared before him. Atterbury.
- LEGATEE. n. f. [from legatum, Lat.] One who has a legacy left him.
If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legatees are blotted out. Dryden's Juvenal.
My will is, that if any of the above-named legatees should die before me, that then the respective legacies shall revert to myself. Swift.
- LEGATION. n. f. [legatio, Latin.] Deputation; commission; embassy.

LEG

- It will be found, that after a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation or indication of a war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but is left at large. Bacon's War with Spain.
In the attiring and ornament of their bodies the duke had a fine and unaffected politeness, and upon occasion civility, as in his legations. Watson.
- LEGATOR. n. f. [from lego, Latin.] One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.
Suppose debate
Betwixt pretenders to a fair estate,
Bequeath'd by some legator's last intent. Dryden.
- LEGEND. n. f. [legenda, Latin.]
1. A chronicle or register of the lives of saints.
Legends being grown in a manner to be nothing else but heaps of frivolous and scandalous vanities, they have been even with disdain thrown out, the very nests which bred them abhorring them. Hooker, b. v.
There are in Rome two sets of antiquities, the christian and the heathen; the former, though of a frether date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
2. Any memorial or relation.
And in this legend all that glorious deed
Read, whilst you arm you; arm you whilst you read. Fairfax, b. i.
3. An incredible unauthentic narrative.
Who can show the legends, that record
More idle tales, or fables so absurd. Blackmore.
It is the way and means of attaining to heaven, that makes profane scorners so willingly let go the expectation of it. It is not the articles of the creed, but the duty to God and their neighbour, that is such an inconsistent incredible legend. Bentley's Sermons.
4. Any inscription; particularly on medals or coins.
Compare the beauty and comprehensiveness of legends on ancient coins. Addison on Medals.
- LEGER. n. f. [from legger, Dutch. To lie or remain in a place.] Any thing that lies in a place; as, a leger ambassador; a resident; one that continues at the court to which he is sent; a leger-book, a book that lies in the computing-house.
Lord Angelo, having affairs to heav'n,
Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting leger. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
I've giv'n him that,
Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her
Of leggers for her sweet. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
If leger ambassadors or agents were sent to remain near the courts of princes, to observe their motions, and to hold correspondence with them, such were made choice of as were vigilant. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Who can endure
Thy praise too much? thou art heav'n's leger here, Working against the states of death and hell. Herbert.
He withdrew not his confidence from any of those who attended his person, who, in truth, lay leger for the covenant, and kept up the spirits of their countrymen by their intelligence. Clarendon, b. ii.
I call that a leger bait, which is fixed, or made to rest, in one certain place, when you shall be absent; and I call that a walking bait which you have ever in motion. Walton.
- LEGERDEMAIN. n. f. [contracted perhaps from legeret de main, French.] Slight of hand; juggler; power of deceiving the eye by nimble motion; trick; deception; knack.
He so light was at legerdmain,
That what he touch'd came not to light again. Hubbard.
Of all the tricks and legerdmain by which men impose upon their own souls, there is none so common as the plea of a good intention. South's Sermons.
- LEGERITY. n. f. [legereté, French.] Lightness; nimbleness; quickness. A word not in use.
When the mind is quicken'd,
The organs though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity. Shakesp. Lear.
- LEGGED. adj. [from leg.] Having legs; furnished with legs.
- LEGIBLE. n. f. [legibilis, Latin.]
1. Such as may be read.
You observe some clergymen with their heads held down within an inch of the cushion, to read what is hardly legible. Swift.
2. Apparent; discoverable.
People's opinions of themselves are legible in their countenances. Thus a kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprize in his air and motion; it stamps value and significance upon his face. Collier.
- LEGIBLY. adv. [from legibilis.] In such a manner as may be read.
- LEGION. [legio, Latin.]

1. A

LEG

1. A body of Roman soldiers, consisting of about five thousand.
The most remarkable piece in Antoninus's pillar is, the figure of Jupiter Pluvius sending rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies, which is the greatest confirmation possible of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.
2. A military force.
She to foreign realms
Sends forth her dreadful legions. Philips.
3. Any great number.
Not in the legions
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd. Shakesp. Macbeth.
The partition between good and evil is broken down; and where one sin has entered, legions will force their way through the same breach. Rogers's Sermons.
- LEGIONARY. adj. [from legio.]
1. Relating to a legion.
2. Containing a legion.
3. Containing a great indefinite number.
Too many applying themselves betwixt jest and earnest, make up the legionary body of error. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
- LEGISLATION. n. f. [from legislator, Lat.] The act of giving laws.
Pythagoras joined legislation to his philosophy, and, like others, pretended to miracles and revelations from God, to give a more venerable sanction to the laws he prescribed. Littleton on the Conversion of St. Paul.
- LEGISLATIVE. adj. [from legislator.] Giving laws; law-giving.
Their legislative frenzy they repent,
Enacting it should make no precedent. Denham.
The poet is a kind of lawgiver, and those qualities are proper to the legislative style. Dryden.
- LEGISLATOR. n. f. [legislator, Latin; legislatur, French.]
1. A lawgiver; one who makes laws for any community.
It spoke like a legislator: the thing spoke was a law. South.
Heroes in animated marble frown,
And legislators seem to think in stone. Pope.
- LEGISLATURE. n. f. [from legislator, Latin.] The power that makes laws.
Without the concurrent consent of all three parts of the legislature, no law is or can be made. Hale's Con. Law.
In the notion of a legislature is implied a power to change, repeal, and suspend laws in being, as well as to make new laws. Addison's Freeholder, No. 16.
By the supreme magistrate is properly understood the legislative power; but the word magistrate seeming to denote a single person, and to express the executive power, it came to pass that the obedience due to the legislature was, for want of considering this easy distinction, misapplied to the administration. Swift's Sentiments of a Ch. of England Man.
- LEGITIMACY. n. f. [from legitimate.]
1. Lawfulness of birth.
In respect of his legitimacy, it will be good. Ayliffe.
2. Genuineness; not spuriousness.
The legitimacy or reality of these marine bodies vindicated, I now inquire by what means they were hurried out of the ocean. Woodward's Natural History.
- LEGITIMATE. adj. [from legitimus, Lat. legitime, French.] Born in marriage; lawfully begotten.
Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land;
Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund. Shakesp. Lear.
An adulterous person is tied to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces, that they may do no injury to the legitimate, by receiving a common portion. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
- To LEGITIMATE. v. a. [legitimer, Fr. from the adjective.]
1. To procure to any the rights of legitimate birth.
Legitimate him that was a bastard. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. To make lawful.
It would be impossible for any enterprize to be lawful, if that which should legitimate it is subsequent to it, and can have no influence to make it good or bad. Decay of Piety.
- LEGITIMATELY. adv. [from legitimate.] Lawfully; genuinely.
By degrees he rose to Jove's imperial feat,
Thus difficulties prove a foul legitimely great. Dryden.
- LEGITIMATION. n. f. [legitimation, French; from legitimate.]
1. Lawful birth.
I have disclaim'd my land;
Legitimation, name, and all is gone:
Then, good my mother, let me know my father. Shakesp. Henry IV.
People's opinions of themselves are legible in their countenances. Thus a kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprize in his air and motion; it stamps value and significance upon his face. Collier.
2. The act of investing with the privileges of lawful birth.
LEGUME. n. f. [legume, French; legumen, Lat.] Seeds
LEGUMEN. n. f. [not repeated, but gathered by the hand; as, beans in general, all larger seeds; pulse.
Some legumens, as peas or beans, if newly gathered and distilled in a retort, will afford an acid spirit. Boyle.

- In the spring fell great rains, upon which ensued a most destructive mildew upon the corn and legumes. Arbutnot.
- LEGUMINOUS. adj. [legumineux, French; from legumen.] Belonging to pulse; consisting of pulse.
The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous seeds: as oats, barley, and wheat; or of some of the filiquose or leguminous; as, peas or beans. Arbutnot.
- LEISURABLY. adv. [from leisureable.] At leisure; without tumult or hurry.
Let us beg of God, that when the hour of our rest is come, the patterns of our dissolution may be Jacob, Moses, Joshua, and David, who leisureably ending their lives in peace, prayed for the mercies of God to come upon their posterity. Hooker, b. v.
- LEISURABLE. adj. [from leisure.] Done at leisure; not hurried; enjoying leisure.
A relation inexcusable in his works of leisureable hours, the examination being as ready as the relation. Brown.
- LEISURE. n. f. [loisir, French.]
1. Freedom from business or hurry; vacancy of mind; power to spend time according to choice.
A gentleman fell very sick, and a friend said to him, Send for a physician; but the sick man answered, It is no matter; for if I die, I will die at leisure. Bacon's Apophthegms.
Where ambition and avarice have made no entrance, the desire of leisure is much more natural than of business and care. Temple.
O happy youth!
For whom thy fates reserve to fair a bride;
He sigh'd, and had no leisure more to say,
His honour call'd his eyes another way. Dryden's Ovid.
You enjoy your quiet in a garden, where you have not only the leisure of thinking, but the pleasure to think of nothing which can discompose your mind. Dryden.
2. Convenience of time.
We'll make our leisures to attend on yours. Shakesp. King Lear.
They summon'd up their meiny, strait took horse;
Commanded me to follow, and attend
The leisure of their answer. Shakesp. King Lear.
I shall leave with him that very rational and emphatical rebuke of Tully, To be considered at his leisure. Locke.
3. Want of leisure. Not used.
More than I have said, loving countrymen;
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakesp. Richard III.
- LEISURELY. adj. [from leisure.] Not hasty; deliberate; done without hurry.
He was the wretchedst thing when he was young,
So long a growing, and so leisurely,
That, if the rule were true, he should be gracious. Shakesp. Richard III.
The earl of Warwick, with a handful of men, fired Leith and Edinburgh, and returned by a leisurely march. Heyward.
The bridge is human life: upon a more leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of threecore and ten intire arches. Addison's Spectator, No. 159.
- LEISURELY. adv. [from leisure.] Not in a hurry; slowly.
The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste,
Our deep-cut heels upon the sands might run;
Or if with caution leisurely we pass,
Their numerous grots might charge us one by one. Dryden.
We defended very leisurely, my friend being careful to count the steps. Addison's Freeholder, No. 47.
- LEMAN. n. f. [Generally supposed to be latrans, the lover, French; but imagined by Junius, with almost equal probability, to be derived from leef, Dutch, or leop, Saxon, beloved and man. This etymology is strongly supported by the ancient orthography, according to which it was written leoman.] A sweetheart; a gallant; or a mistress. Hammer.
Hold for my sake, and do him not to dye;
But vanquish'd, thine eternal bondslave make,
And me thy worthy meed unto thy leman take. Fa. Qu.
A cup of wine,
That's brisk and fine,
And drink unto the leman mine. Shakesp. Henry IV.
- LEMON. n. f. [limon, French; limonium, low Latin.]
1. The fruit of the lemon-tree.
The juice of lemons is more cooling and astringent than that of oranges. Arbutnot on Aliments.
The dyers use it for dyeing of bright yellows and lemon colours. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Bear me, Pomona!
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange, glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend. Thomson's Sermons.
2. The tree that bears lemons.
The lemon tree hath large stiff leaves; the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruit is almost of an oval figure, and divided into several cells, in which which are lodged hard seeds, surrounded by a thick fleshy substance, which, for the most part, is full of an acid juice. There are many varieties of this tree, and the fruit is yearly imported from Lisbon in great plenty.

LEMNADRE. n. f. [from lemon.] Liquor made of water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.

Thou, and thy wife, and children, should walk in my gardens, buy toys, and drink lemonade. Arbutnot J. Bull.

TO LEND. v. a. [Lanān, Saxon; lencan, Dutch.]

1. To afford, on condition of repayment.

Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase.

They dare not give, and e'en refuse to lend.

To their poor kindred, or a wanting friend.

2. To suffer to be used on condition that it be restored.

In common worldly things 'tis call'd ungrateful.

With dull unwillingness to pay a debt.

Which, with a bounteous hand, was kindly lent;

Much more to be thus opposite with heav'n.

I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power to give thy tranquillity.

The fair blessing we vouchsafe to lend;

Nor can we spare you long, though often we may lend.

3. To afford; to grant in general.

Covetousness, like the sea, receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back again.

Painting and poetry are two sisters so like, that they lend to each other their name and office: one is called a dumb poetry, and the other a speaking picture.

From thy new hope, and from thy growing store,

Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor.

Cato, lend me for a while thy patience,

And condescend to hear a young man speak.

Wilt lend a hand to close thy mistress' eyes.

LENDER. n. f. [from lend.]

1. One who lends any thing.

2. One who makes a trade of putting money to interest.

Let the state be answered some small matter, and the rest left to the lender; if the abatement be but small, it will not discourage the lender: he that took before ten in the hundred, will sooner descend to eight than give over this trade.

Whole droves of lenders crowd the bankers doors.

To call in money.

Interest would certainly encourage the lender to venture in such a time of danger.

LENGER. n. f. [from leng, Saxon.]

1. The extent of any thing material from end to end; the longest line that can be drawn through a body.

There is in Ticinum a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty: it reporteth the voice twelve or thirteen times.

Horizontal extension.

Mezentius rushes on his foes,

And first unhappy Acon overthrows;

Stretch'd at his length he spurs the swarthy ground.

2. A certain portion of space or time.

Large lengths of seas and shores

Between my father and my mother lay.

To get from th' enemy, and Ralph, free;

Left danger, fears, and foes, behind,

And beat, at least three lengths, the wind.

Time glides along with undiscover'd haste,

The future but a length beyond the past.

What length of lands, what oceans have you pass'd,

What storms sustain'd, and on what shores been cast?

3. Extent of duration.

Having thus got the idea of duration, the next thing is to get some measure of this common duration, whereby to judge of its different lengths.

Long duration or protraction.

May heav'n, great monarch, still augment your bliss

With length of days, and every day like this.

Such toil requir'd the Roman name,

Such length of labour for so vast a frame.

In length of time it will cover the whole plain, and make one mountain with that on which it now stands.

4. Reach or expansion of any thing.

I do not recommend to all a pursuit of sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns have advanced them.

Full extent; uncontracted state.

If Lætitia, who sent me this account, will acquaint me with the worthy proclaimant's name; I will insert it at length in one of my papers.

He had march'd to the length of Exeter, which he had some thought of besieging.

LENT. n. f. [from lent, Saxon; lencan, Dutch.]

1. To draw out; to make longer; to elongate.

Relaxing the fibres, is making them flexible, or easy to be lengthen'd without rupture.

Falling dews with fragrant deck'd the glade,

And the low fun had lengthen'd ev'ry shade.

2. To protract; to continue.

Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor; if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity.

Frame your mind to mirth and merriment,

Which bars a thousand harms, and lengthens life.

It is in our power to secure to ourselves an interest in the divine mercies that are yet to come, and to lengthen the course of our present prosperity.

3. To protract pronunciation.

The learned languages were less constrained in the quantity of every syllable, besides helps of grammatical figures for the lengthening or abbreviation of them.

4. To lengthen out.

To protract; to extend.

What if I please to lengthen out his date

A day, and take a pride to cozen fate.

I'll heard up every moment of my life,

To lengthen out the payment of my tears.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words.

TO LENGTHEN. v. n. To grow longer; to increase in length.

One may as well make a yard, whose parts lengthen and shrink, as a measure of trade in materials, that have not always a settled value.

Still 'tis farther from its end;

Still finds its error lengthen with its way.

LENTISE. adv. [from lent, Saxon; lencan, Dutch.]

1. Affluative; softening; mitigating.

With study'd argument, and much persuasion sought,

Lentise of grief and anxious thought.

In this one passion man can strength enjoy;

Time, that on all things lays his lenient hand,

Yet tames not this; it sticks to our last band.

2. Laxative; emollient.

Oils relax the fibres, are lenient, balsamick, and abate acrimony in the blood.

LENIENT. n. f. An emollient, or affluative application.

LEV'Y. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of raising money or men.
They have already contributed all their superfluous hands, and every new levy they make must be at the expence of their farms and commerce. Addison's State of the War.
2. War raised.
Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison,
Malice domestick, foreign levy, nothing
Can touch him further! Shakespeare's Macbeth.
LEWD. adj. [leuede, Saxon.]
1. Lay; not clerical. Obsolete.
For levy men this book I writ.
So these great clerks their little wisdom shew
To mock the lewd, as learn'd in this as they. Davies.
2. Wicked; bad; naughty.
If some be admitted into the ministry, either void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitgift.
Before

LIB

Before they did oppress the people, only by colour of a lewd custom, they did afterwards use the same oppressions by warrant.

3. Luffful; libidinous.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,

But on his knees at meditation. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

Then lewd Anchemolus he laid in dust,

Who stain'd his stepdam's bed with impious lust. Dryden.

LEWDLY, adj. [from lewd.] Wickedly; naughtily.

1. Wickedly; naughtily.

A sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent,

Have practis'd dangerously against your state. Shakespeare.

2. Libidinally; lustfully.

He lov'd fair lady Elfred, lewdly lov'd,

Whose wanton pleasures him too much did please,

That quite his heart from Guendeline remov'd. Spenser.

So lewdly dull his idle works appear,

The wretched texts deserve no comments here. Dryden.

LEWDNESS, n. f. [from lewd.] Lustful licentiousness.

Suffer no lewdness, nor indecent speech,

Th' apartment of the tender youth to reach. Dryd. Juv.

Damianus's letter to Nicholas is an authentick record of the lewdness committed under the reign of celibacy. Atterbury.

LEWDSTER, n. f. [from lewd.] A lecher; one given to criminal pleasures.

Against such lewdsters, and their lechery,

Those that betray them do no treachery. Shakespeare.

LEWIS D'OR, n. f. [French.] A golden French coin, in value twelve livres, now settled at seventeen shillings. Dia.

LEXICOGRAPHY, n. f. [λεξικόν and γραφία, lexicographia, French.] A writer of dictionaries; a harmless drudge, that buies himself in tracing the original, and detailing the signification of words.

Commentators and lexicographers acquainted with the Sy-riac language, have given these hints in their writings on scripture. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

LEXICOGRAPHY, n. f. [λεξικόν and γραφία.] The art or practice of writing dictionaries.

LEXICON, n. f. [λεξικόν.] A dictionary; a book teaching the signification of words.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet if he had not studied the solid things in them as well as the words and lexi- cons, yet he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man as any yeoman competently wife in his mother dialect only. Milton.

LEV, n. f.

Lev, lee, lay, are all from the Saxon leag, a field or pasture, by the usual melting of the letter g or g. Gilson's Cam.

LIABLE, n. f. [liable, from lier, old French.] Obnoxious;
 not exempt; subject.

But what is strength without a double share
 Of wisdom? vast, unwieldy, burthenome,
 Proudly secure, yet liable to fall

By weakest subtleties. Milton's Agonistes.

The English boast of Spenser and Milton, who neither of them want'd genius or learning; and yet both of them are liable to many censures. Dryden's Juvenal.

This, or any other scheme, coming from a private hand, might be liable to many defects. Swift.

LIAR, n. f. [from lie.] This word would analogically be liar; but this orthography has prevailed, and the convenience of distinction from liar, he who lies down, is sufficient to confirm it.] One who tells falsehood; one who wants veracity.

She's like a liar, gone to burning hell!

'Twas I that kill'd her. Shakespeare's Othello.

He approves the common liar, fame,

Who speaks him thus at Rome. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

I do not reject his observation as untrue, much less condemn the person himself as a liar, whenever it seems to be contradicted. Boyle.

Thy better soul abhors a liar's part,

Wife is thy voice, and noble is thy heart. Pope's Odyssey.

LIARD, adj.

1. Mingled roan. Markham.

2. Liard in Scotland denotes gray-haired; as, he's a liard old man.

LIBATION, n. f. [libatio, Latin.]

1. The act of pouring wine on the ground in honour of some deity.

In digging new earth pour in some wine, that the vapour of the earth and wine may comfort the spirits, provided it be not taken for a heathen sacrifice, or libation to the earth.
Bacon's Natural History.

2. The wine so poured.

They had no other crime to object against the Christians, but that they did not offer up libations, and the smoke of sacrifices, to dead men. Strlingfleet on Rom. Idolatry.

The goblet then the took, with nectar crown'd,

Sprinkling the first libations on the ground. Dryden's Æn.

LIB

LI'BEARD, n. f. [liebard, German; leopardus, Lat.] A leopard.

Make the libbard stern,

Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn.

The libbard, and the tiger, as the mole

Rifling, the crumbled earth above them threw. Milton.

The torrid parts of Africk are by Pilo resemb'd to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the difference of habitations, or towns of Africk. Brerewood.

LIBEL, n. f. [libellus, Latin; libelle, French.]

1. A satire; defamatory writing; a lampoon.

Are we reproach'd for the name of Christ? that ignominy serves but to advance our future glory; every such libel here becomes panegyric there. Decay of Piety.

Good heav'n! that fets and knaves should be so vain,

To wish their vile resemblance should be so vain,

And stand recorded, at their own request,

To future days, a libel or a jest. Dryden.

2. [In the civil law.] A declaration or charge in writing against a person in court.

To LIBEL, v. n. [from the noun.] To spread defamation;
 generally written or printed.

Sweet scrawls to fly about the streets of Rome:

What's this but libelling against the senate? Shakespeare.

He, like a privileged spy, whom nothing can

Discredit, libels now gainst each great man. Donne.

To LIBEL, v. a. To satirize; to lampoon;

Is then the peage of England any thing dishonoured when a peer suffers for his treason? if he be libelled, or any way defamed, he has his scandalum magnatum to punish the offender. Dryden.

But what to pure which envious tongues will spare?

Some wicked wits have libelled all the fair. Pope.

LI'ELLER, n. f. [from libel.] A defamer by writing; a lampooner.

Our common libellers are as free from the imputation of wit, as of morality. Dryden's Juvenal.

The squibs are those who, in the common phrase, are called libellers and lampooners.

The common libellers, in their invectives, tax the church with an insatiable desire of power and wealth, equally common to all bodies of men. Swift.

LIBELLOUS, n. f. [from libel.] Defamatory.

It was the most malicious rumour that had ever been brewed, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet. Watts.

LIBERAL, adj. [liberalis, Latin; liberal, French.]

1. Not mean; not low in birth; not low in mind.

2. Becoming a gentleman.

3. Munificent; generous; bountiful; not parcimonious.

Her name was Mercy, well known over all

To be both gracious and eke liberal. Spenser's Fa. Queen.

Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doctrine.

Men of his way should be most liberal,

They're set here for examples. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Needs must the pow'r

That made us, and for us this ample world,

Be infinitely good, and of his good

As liberal and free, as infinite. Milton.

There is no art better than to be liberal of praise and commendation to others, in that wherein a man's self hath any perfection. Bacon's Essays.

The liberal are secure alone;

For what we frankly give, for ever is our own. Cromwell.

Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, are, in their sermons, very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers, as if it were our duty to understand them. Swift.

LIBERALITY, n. f. [liberalitas, Latin; liberalité, Fr.] Munificence; bounty; generosity; generous profusion.

Why should he despair, that knows to court

With words, fair looks, and liberality? Shakespeare.

Such moderation with thy bounty join,

That thou may'st nothing give that is not thine;

That liberality is but cast away,

Which makes us borrow what we cannot pay. Donne.

LIBERALLY, adv. [from liberal.] Bountifully; bountifully; largely.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. James i. 5.

LIBERTINE, n. f. [libertin, French.]

1. One unconfin'd; one at liberty.

When he speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;

And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,

To steal his sweet and honied sentences. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

2. One who lives without restraint or law.

Man, the lawless libertine, may rove

Free and unquestion'd. Rew's Jone Short.

Want of power is the only bound that a libertine puts to his views upon any of the sex. Clarissa.

LIB

2. One who pays no regard to the precepts of religion.

They say this town is full of couzenage,

As nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye;

Disguis'd cheaters, prating mountebanks,

And many such like libertines of sin. Shakespeare.

That word may be applied to some few libertines in the audience. Collier's View of the Stage.

3. [In law; libertinus, Lat.] A freedman; or rather, the son of a freedman.

Some persons are forbidden to be accusers on the score of their sex, as women; others on the score of their age, as pupils and infants; others on the score of their conditions, as libertinus against their patrons. Ayliffe's Parergon.

LIBERTINE, adj. [libertin, French.] Licentious; irreligious.

There are men that marry not, but chuse rather a libertine and impure single life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.

Might not the queen make diligent enquiry, if any person about her should happen to be of libertine principles or morals. Swift's Project for Advancement of Religion.

LIBERTINISM, n. f. [from libertine.] Irreligion; licentiousness of opinions and practice.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of liberty and libertinism, of infidelity and profaneness, started up in the room of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

LIBERTY, n. f. [liberté, French; libertas, Latin.]

1. Freedom, as opposed to slavery.

My master knows of your being here, and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he fears, he'll turn me away. Shakespeare.

O liberty! thou goddess, heav'nly bright!

Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight,

Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign. Addison.

2. Freedom, as opposed to necessity.

Liberty is the power in any agent to do, or forbear, any particular action, according to the determination, or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other. Locke.

As it is in the motions of the body, so it is in the thoughts of our minds: where any one is such, that we have power to take it up, or lay it by, according to the preference of the mind, there we are at liberty. Locke.

3. Privilege; exemption; immunity.

His majesty gave not an intire country to any, much less did he grant jura regalia, or any extraordinary liberties. Davies.

4. Relaxation of restraint.

5. Leave; permission.

I shall take the liberty to consider a third ground, which,
 with some men, has the same authority. Locke.

LIB'DINOUS, n. f. [libidinofus, Latin.] Lewd; lustful.

None revolt from the faith; because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her, but because they are much more restrained from the perpetration of their lusts. If wanton glances and libidinofus thoughts had been permitted by the gospel, they would have apostatized nevertheless. Bentley.

LIB'DINOSLY, adv. [from libidinofus.] Lewdly; lustfully.

LIB'RAL, adj. [liberalis, Latin.] Of a pound weight. Dia.

LIB'RIAN, n. f. [librarius, Latin.]

1. One who has the care of a library.

2. One who transcribes or copies books.

Charybdis thrice swallows, and thrice refunds, the waves:
 this must be understood of regular tides. There are indeed but two tides in a day, but this is the error of the li- brarians. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

LIBRARY, n. f. [libraria, Fr.] A large collection of books, publick or private.

Then as they 'gan his library to view,

And antique registers for to avise,

There chanced to the prince's hand to rise

An ancient book, high Briton's monuments. Fa. Qu.

Make choice of all my library,

And so beguile thy sorrow. Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

I have given you the library of a painter, and a catalogue of such books as he ought to read. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To LIBRATE, v. a. [libre, Latin.] To poise; to balance;

to hold in equipoise.

LIBRATION, n. f. [libratio, Latin; libration, French.]

1. The state of being balanced.

This is what may be said of the balance, and the libra- tion, of the body. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Their pinions still

In loose librations stretch'd, to trust the void

Trembling refuse. Thomson's Spring.

2. [In astronomy.]

Libration is the balancing motion or trepidation in the fir-mament, whereby the declination of the sun, and the latitude of the stars, change from time to time. Astronomers likewise ascribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that, at full moon, they sometimes discover parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times. These kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Besides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libra- tion, and which consists in this, that when the moon is at her greatest elongation from the south, her axis being then almost perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptick, the sun must enlighten towards the north pole of the moon some parts which he did not before; and that, on the contrary, some parts of those which he enlightened towards the opposite pole are obscured; and this produces the same effect which the libration in latitude does. Dict. Trev.

LIC

Those planets which move upon their axis, do not all make intire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of libration, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis. Grew.

LIBRATORY, adj. [from libra, Lat.] Balancing; playing like a balance.

LICE, the plural of louse.

Red blisters rising on their paps appear,

And flaming carbuncles, and noisome sweat,

And clammy dews, that loathsome lice beget;

Till the slow creeping evil eats his way. Dryden's Virg.

LICERANE, n. f. [lice and hanc.] A plant.

LICENSE, n. f. [licentia, Latin; licence, French.]

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and necessary restraint.

Some of the wiser seeing that a popular licence is indeed the many-headed tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Mu-

LIC

The licentiate somewhat licentious, least they should prejudice poetical liberty, will pardon themselves for doubling or rejecting a letter. Camden's Remains.
LICENTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from licentius.] Boundless liberty; contempt of just restraint.

One error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained. Ral.
 This custom has been always looked upon, by the wisest men, as an effect of licentiousness, and not of liberty. Swift.
 During the greatest licentiousness of the press, the character of the queen was insulted. Swift.

LICH. n. f. [lice, Saxon.] A dead carcase; whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; Lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordshire, so named from martyred christians. Salve magna parens. Lichwake is still retained in Scotland in the same sense.

LICHOWL. n. f. [lich and owl.] A sort of owl, by the vulgar supposed to foretell death.

TO LICK. v. a. [licen, Saxon; licken, Dutch.]

1. To pass over with the tongue.
Esculapius went about with a dog and a she-goat, both which he used much in his cures; the first for licking all ulcered wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach and lungs. Temple.

A bear's a savage beast;
 Whelp'd without form, until the dam
 Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras, p. i.

He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
 And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dews. Dryden.
 I have seen an antiquary lick an old coin, among other trials, to distinguish the age of it by its taste. Addison.

2. To lap; to take in by the tongue.

At once pluck out
 The multitudinous tongue; let them not lick
 The sweet which is their poison. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. To lick up. To devour.
 Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass. Numb. xxii. 4.

When luxury has lick'd up all thy pelf,
 Curs'd by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself:
 Think how posterity will treat thy name. Pope's Horace.
LICK. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow; rough usage: a low word.

He turned upon me as round as a chafed boar, and gave me a lick across the face. Dryden.

LICKERISH. adj. [liccepa, a glutton, Saxon.]

LICKEROUS. adj. [liccepa, a glutton, Saxon.]

1. Nice in the choice of food; squeamish.
 Voluptuous men sacrifice all substantial satisfactions to a liquorish palate. L'Estrange.

2. Eager; greedy.

Then is never tongue-tied, where fit commendation, whereof womankind is so lickerish, is offered unto it. Sidney.

Strephon, fond boys, delighted, did not know
 That it was love that shin'd in shining maid;
 But lick'd, poison'd, faint to her would go. Sidney.

Certain rare manuscripts, fought in the most remote parts by Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, had been left to his widow, and were upon sale to the jesuits, liquorish chapmen of all such ware. Watson.

In vain he profer'd all his goods to save
 His body, destin'd to that living grave;
 The liquorish hag rejects the pelf with scorn,
 And nothing but the man would serve her turn. Dryden.

In some provinces they were to liquorish after man's flesh, that they would suck the blood as it run from the dying man. Locke.

3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite.

Wouldst thou seek again to trap me here
 With lickerish baits, fit to enslave a brute? Milton.

LICKERISHNESS. n. f. [from lickerish.] Niceness of palate.

LICORICE. n. f. [γλυκύριζα; liquoricia, Italian; glycyrrhiza, Latin.] A root of sweet taste.

Liquorice hath a papilionaceous flower; the pointal which arises from the empalement becomes a shoot pod, containing several kidney-shaped seeds; the leaves are placed by pairs joined to the mid-rib, and are terminated by an odd lobe. Miller.

Liquorice root is long and slender, externally of a dusky reddish brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, void of smell, and of a taste sweeter than sugar, it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain, and Germany.

This root is excellent in coughs, and all disorders of the lungs. The inspissated juice of this root is brought to us from Spain and Holland; from the first of which places it obtained the name of Spanish juice. Hill's Materia Medica.

LICTOR. n. f. [Latin.] A beadle that attended the consuls to apprehend or punish criminals.

Saucy lictors. Shakef. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Will catch at us like strumpets. Shakef. Ant. and Cleopatra.

LIE

PROCONSULS to their provinces
 Hastings, or on return, in robes of state,
 Lictors and rods the ensigns of their power. Milton.

Democritus could feel his spleen, and shake
 His sides and shoulders till he felt 'em ake;
 Though in his country-town no lictors were,
 Nor rods, nor ax, nor tribune. Dryden's Juvenal.

LID. [lice, Saxon; lied, German.]

1. A cover; any thing that shuts down over a vessel; a lid, cover, or stopple that enters the mouth.
 Hope, instead of flying off with the rest, stuck so close to the lid of the cup, that it was shut down upon her. Addison.

2. The membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.
 Do not for ever with thy veiled lids,
 Seek for thy noble father in the dust. Shakef. Hamlet.

Our eyes have lids, our ears still open we keep. Davies.
 The fields fair eyes saw her, and saw no more,
 But shut their flow'ry lids for ever night,
 And winter drew'd her way. Craford.

That eye dropp'd sense distinct and clear,
 As any mule's tongue could speak;
 When from its lid a pearly tear
 Ran trickling down her beautiful cheek. Prior.

The rod of Hermes
 To sleep could mortal eye-lids fix,
 And drive departed souls to Styx:
 That rod was just a type of Sid's,
 Which o'er a British fenate's lids
 Could scatter opium full as well,
 And drive as many souls to hell. Swift.

LIE. n. f. [lie, French.] Any thing impregnated with some other body; as, soap or salt.

Chamber-lie breads fleas like a loach. Shakespeare.
 All liquid things conected by heat become yellow; as, lie, wort, &c. Praebum on Drawings.

LIE. n. f. [liege, Saxon.]

1. A criminal falsehood.

My name's Macbeth.
 —The devil himself could not pronounce a title
 More hateful to mine ear.
 —No; nor more fearful.
 —Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword
 I'll prove the lie thou speak'st. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

A lie is properly an outward signification of something contrary to, or at least beside, the inward sense of the mind; so that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant, or intended, that is properly a lie. South.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will; and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lie, than the will can chuse an apparent evil. Dryden.

When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, this is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his error; this is the primary idea; but if I say it is a lie, the word lie carries also a secondary idea; for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watt's Logic.

2. A charge of falsehood.

That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword,
 That it shall render vengeance and revenge;
 Till thou the lie giver, and that lie, rest
 In earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shakef. Rich. II.

It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knew to be true. Locke.

Men will give their own experience the lie, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with their tenets. Locke.

3. A fiction.

The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply;
 The truth is moral, though the tale a lie. Dryden.

TO LIE. v. n. [logan, Saxon; liegen, Dutch.]

1. To utter criminal falsehood.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakespeare's Othello.

If a foul lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, he shall restore that which was delivered. Levit. vi. 1.

Should I lie against my right?
 Inform us, will the emperor treat?
 Or do the prints and papers lie? Pope.

TO LIE. v. n. pret. I lay; I have lain or lien. [liegan, Saxon; liegen, Dutch.]

1. To rest horizontally, or with very great inclination against something else.

2. To rest; to lean upon.

Death lies on her like an untimely flow'r;
 Upon the sweetest flow'r of all the field. Shakespeare.

Lie heavy on him, earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee. Epitaph on Vanbrugh.

LIE

3. To be reposed in the grave.
 All the kings of the nations lie in glory, every one in his own house. Isa. xiv. 18.

I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in your burying place. Gen. xlvii. 30.

4. To be in a state of decumbiture.
 How many good young princes would do so; their fathers lying so sick as yours at this time is. Shakef. Henry IV.

My little daughter lieth at the point of death; I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed. Mark v. 23.

5. To pass the time of sleep.

The watchful traveller,
 That by the moon's mistaken light did rise,
 Lay down again, and closed his weary eyes. Dryden.

6. To be laid up or reposed.

I have seen where copperas is made great variety of them, divers of which I have yet lying by me. Boyle.

7. To remain fixed.

The Spaniards have but one temptation to quarrel with us, the recovering of Jamaica, that has ever lien at their hearts. Temple.

8. To reside.

If thou dost well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou dost not well, sin lieth at the door. Gen. iv. 7.

9. To be placed or situated.

We have gone through deserts, where there lay no way. Wisd. v. 7.

I fly
 To those happy climes that lie,
 Where day never shuts his eye,
 Up in the broad fields of the sky. Milton.

There lies our way, and that our passage home. Dryd.
 Envy lies between beings equal in nature, though unequal in circumstances. Calder of Emory.

The business of a tutor, rightly employed, lies out of the road. Locke on Education.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undeterminate confusion of a negative idea. Locke.

10. To press upon.

Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Psal. lxxxviii. 7.

Whither away so fast?
—No farther than the tower,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.
—We'll enter all together,
And in good time here the lieutenant comes. Shakespeare.
I must put you in mind of the lords lieutenants, and deputy lieutenants, of the counties: their proper use is for ordering the military affairs, in order to oppose an invasion from abroad, or a rebellion or sedition at home. Bacon.
Killing, as it is considered in itself without all undue circumstances, was never prohibited to the lawful magistrate, who is the vicegerent or lieutenant of God, from whom he derives his power of life and death. Bramhall against Hobbes.
Sent by our new lieutenants, who in Rome,
And since from me, has heard of your removal:
I come to offer peace. Philips's Briton.

of lieutenant.
LIFE. n. f. plural lives. [Lupan, to live, Saxon.]
1. Union and co-operation of soul with body.
On thy life no more.
—My life I never held but as a pawn
To wage against thy foes; nor fear to lose it,
Thy safety being the motive. Shakespeare's King Lear.
She shews a body rather than a life.
A statue than a breather. Shakel. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Gen. i. 20.
The identity of the same man consists in nothing but a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles of matter, in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.
So peaceful shalt thou end thy blissful days,
And deal thyself from life by slow decays. Pope.
2. Present state.
O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
So like, that we may take the one for t'other!
Dream of a shadow! a reflection made
From the false glories of the gay reflected bow,
Is more a solid thing than thou!
Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities;
Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain,
But, brookt and o'erwhelm'd, the ocean meets again. Cowley.
- When I consider life 'tis all a cheat,
Yet fool'd by hope men favour the deceit,
Live on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's falser than the former day;
Lies more; and when it fays we shall be blest
With some new joy, takes off what we possess.
Strange cozenage! none would live past years again,
Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give:
I'm tir'd of waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.
Howe'er 'tis well that while mankind
Through life's perverie meanders errs,
He can imagin'd pleasures find,
To combat against real cares. Prior.
3. Enjoyment, or possession of terrestrial existence.
Then avarice 'gan through his veins to inspire
His greedy flames, and kindle life devouring fire. Fa. Qu.
Their complot is to have my life:
And, if my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness. Shakespeare.
Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st
Live well, how long or short permit to heav'n. Milton.

The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.
Common occurrences; human affairs; the course of things.
This I know, not only by reading of books in my study, but also by experience of life abroad in the world. Afham.
Not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle; but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom. Milton's Paradise Lost.
12. Living person.
Why should I play the Roman fool, and die
On my own sword? whilst I see lives the gashes
Do better upon them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
13. Narrative of a life past.
Plutarch, that writes his life,
Tells us, that Cato dearly lov'd his wife. Pope.
14. Spirit; briskness; vivacity; resolution.
The Helots bent thitherward with a new life of resolution, as if their captain had been a root out of which their courage had sprung.
They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words; and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is as good oratory and poetry to them as the best. Felton.
Not with half the fire and life,
With which he kis'd Amphytion's wife. Prior.
15. Animated existence; animal being.
Full nature swarms with life. Thomson.
- LIFEBLOOD. n. f. [life and blood.] The blood necessary to life;

They lov'd with that calm and noble value which dwells in the heart, with a warmth like that of lifeblood. Spektator.
Money, the lifeblood of the nation,
Corrupts and stagnates in the veins,
Unless a proper circulation
Its motion and its heat maintains. Swift.
His forehead struck the ground,
Lifeblood and life rush'd mingled through the wound. Dryd.
LIFEVERLASTING. An herb. Ainsworth.
- LIFEGIVING. n. f. [life and giving.] Having the power to give life.
His own heat,
Kindled at first from heaven's lifegiving fire. Spenser.
He fat devising death
To them who liv'd; nor on the virtue thought
Of that lifegiving plant. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- LIFEGUARD. n. f. [life and guard.] The guard of a king's person.

Impress'd the form of Iphigeneia the fair. Pope's Odyssey.
- LIFE STRING. n. f. [life and string.] Nerve; strings imagined to convey life.
These lines are the veins, the arteries,
The undecaying lifestrings of those hearts
That still shall pant, and still shall exercise
The motion spirit and nature both impart. Daniel's Mus.
- LIFETIME. n. f. [life and time.] Continuance or duration of life.
Jordan talked prose all his lifetime, without knowing what it was. Addison on ancient Medals.
- LIFEWEARY. adj. [life and weary.] Wretched; tired of living.
Let me have
A dram of poison, such soon speeding geer
As will disperse itself through all the veins,
That the lifeweary taker may fall dead. Shakespeare
- TO LIFT. v. a. [lifta, Swedish; lefter, Danish.]
1. To raise from the ground; to heave; to elevate; to hold on high.
Filiat ingratitude!
Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand
For lifting food to't. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Your guests are coming;
Lift up your countenance, as 'twere the day
Of celebration of that nuptial. Shakel. Winter Tale.
Propp'd by the spring, it lifts aloft the head,
But of a sickly beauty soon to shed,
In summer living, and in winter dead. Dryden.
2. To bear; to support. Not in use.
So down he fell, that th' earth him underneath
Did groan, as feeble to great load to lift. Fairy Queen.
3. To rob; to plunder.

Thou, O Lord, art my glory, and the lifter up of mine head. Psal. iii. 3.

LIG

To LIG. v. n. [leggen, Dutch.] To lie.

Thou kenst the great care
I have of thy health and thy welfare,
Which many wild beasts ligger in wait,
For to entrap in thy tender state.

LIGAMENT. n. f. [ligamentum, from ligo, Latin; ligament, French.]

Ligament is a white and solid body, softer than a cartilage, but harder than a membrane; they have no conspicuous cavities, neither have they any fenel, left they should suffer upon the motion of the joint: their chief use is to fasten the bones, which are articulated together for motion, left they should be dislocated with exercise.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound,
And their disjointed bones to powder ground.
The incus frute between the two former is one way joined to the malleus, the other end being a process is fixed with a ligament to the stapes.

[In popular or poetical language.] Any thing which connects the parts of the body.

Though our ligaments betimes grow weak,
We must not force them till themselves they break.

Bond; chain; entanglement.

Men sometimes, upon the hour of departure, do speak and reason above themselves; for then the soul, beginning to be freed from the ligaments of the body, reasons like herself, and discourses in a strain above mortality.

LIGAMENTAL. n. f. [from ligament.] Composing a ligamentous.

The urachos or ligamental passage is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it discharges the watery and urinary part of its aliment.

The clavicle is inserted into the first bone of the sternon, and bound in by a strong ligamentous membrane.

LIGATION. n. f. [ligatio, Latin.]

1. The act of binding.

2. The state of being bound.

The slumber of the body seems to be but the waking of the soul: it is the ligation of sense, but the liberty of reason.

LIGATURE. n. f. [ligature, French; ligatura, Latin.]

1. Any thing bound on; bandage.

He deludeth us also by philters, ligatures, charms, and many superstitious ways in the cure of diseases.

If you slit the artery, and thrust into it a pipe, and cast a strait ligature upon that part of the artery; notwithstanding the blood hath free passage through the pipe, yet will not the artery beat below the ligature; but do but take off the ligature it will beat immediately.

The many ligatures of our English drels check the circulation of the blood.

I found my arms and legs very strongly fastened on each side to the ground; I likewise felt several slender ligatures across my body, from my arm-pits to my thighs.

2. The act of binding.

The fatal noose performed its office, and with most strict ligature squeezed the blood into his face.

Any stoppage of the circulation will produce a dropy, as by strong ligature, or compression.

3. The state of being bound.

Sand and gravel grounds easily admit of heat and moisture, for which they are not much the better, because they let it pass too soon, and contract no ligature.

LIGHT. n. f. [leoht, Saxon.]

1. That quality or action of the medium of light by which we see.

Light is propagated from luminous bodies in time, and spends about seven or eight minutes of an hour in passing from the sun to the earth.

2. Illumination of mind; instruction; knowledge.

Of those things which are for direction of all the parts of our life needful, and not impossible to be discerned by the light of nature itself, are there not many which few men's natural capacity hath been able to find out.

Light may be taken from the experiment of the horse-tooth rings, how that those things which assuage the strife of the spirits, do help diseases contrary to the intention desired.

I will place within them as a guide
My umpire conscience, whom if they will hear
Light after light well us'd they shall attain,
And to the end perishing fate arrive.

I opened Ariosto in Italian, and the very first two lines gave me light to all I could desire.

If this internal light, or any proposition which we take for inspired, be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it.

The ordinary words of language, and our common use of them, would have given us light into the nature of our ideas, if considered with attention.

The books of Varro concerning navigation are lost, which no doubt would have given us great light in those matters.

3. The part of a picture which is drawn with bright colours, or in which the light is supposed to fall.

Never admit two equal lights in the same picture; but the greater light must strike forcibly on those places of the picture where the principal figures are; diminishing as it comes nearer the borders.

4. Reach of knowledge; mental view.

Light, and understanding, and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him.

We saw as it were thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the south sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents that hitherto were not come to light.

5. Point of view; situation; direction in which the light falls.

Frequent consideration of a thing wears off the strangeness of it; and shews it in its several lights, and various ways of appearance, to the view of the mind.

It is impossible for a man of the greatest parts to consider any thing in its whole extent, and in all its variety of lights.

An author who has not learned the art of raising his thoughts, and letting them in proper lights, will lose himself in confusion.

6. Explanation.

I have endeavoured, throughout this discourse, that every former part might give strength unto all that follow, and every latter bring some light unto all before.

We should compare places of scripture treating of the same point: thus one part of the sacred text could not fall to give light unto another.

7. Any thing that gives light; a pharos; a taper.

That light we see is burning in my hall;
How far that little candle throws his beams,
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and fell down before Paul.

I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, for salvation unto the ends of the earth.

Let them be for signs,
For seasons, and for days, and circling years;
And let them be for lights, as I ordain
Their office in the firmament of heav'n,
To give light on the earth.

I put as great difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and an evanid meteor.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt because they stand too thick 't' th' fly,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy.

I will make some officers at their safety, by fixing some marks like lights upon a coast, by which their ships may avoid at least known rocks.

He still must mourn
The sun, and moon, and ev'ry starry light,
Eclips'd to him, and lost in everlasting night.

Lightning, n. f. [from lighten, lightening, lightning.]
1. The flash that attends thunder.
Lightning is a great flame, very bright, extending every way to a great distance, suddenly darting upwards, and there ending, so that it is only momentaneous. Milchtrek.
Sense thinks the lightning born before the thunder;
What tells us then they both together are? Davies.
Salmonous, suffering cruel pains I found
For emulating Jove; the rattling sound
Of mimic thunder, and the glittering blaze
Of pointed lightnings, and their forked rays. Dryd. Æn.
No warning of the approach of flame,
Swiftly, like sudden death, it came;
Like travellers by lightning kill'd,
I burnt the moment I beheld. Granville.
2. Mitigation; abatement.
How oft when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry? which their keepers call
A lightning before death. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.

cedar trees beside the water. Nam. xxiv. 6.
- Ligneous*, adj. [lignæus, Latin; ligneux, French.] Made of wood; woody; resembling wood.
It should be tried with shoots of vines, and roots of red roses; for it may be they, being of a more ligneous nature, will incorporate with the tree itself. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Ten thousand seeds of the plant harts-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn: now the covers, and the true body of each seed, the parenchymous and ligneous part of both, and the fibres of those parts, multiplied one by another, afford a thousand hundred millions of formed atoms, but how many more we cannot define. Grew's Cosmol.
- Lignumvitæ*, n. f. [Lat.] Guaiacum; a very hard wood.
It hath pinnated leaves; the flower consists of several petals, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of

There let them learn, as likes them, to despise
God and Messiah. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
- To Like*, v. n.
1. To be pleased with, with of before the thing approved.
Obsolete.
Of any thing more than of God they could not by any means like, as long as whatsoever they knew besides God, they apprehended it not in itself without dependancy upon God. Hooker, b. i.
The young soldiers did with such cheerfulness like of this resolution, that they thought two days a long delay. Knolles.
It is true, there are limits to be set betwixt the boldness and rashness of a poet; but he must understand those limits who pretends to judge, as well as he who undertakes to write: and he who has no liking to the whole, ought in rea-

LITERAL. adj. [literal, French; litera, Latin.]

1. According to the primitive meaning; not figurative.

Through all the writings of the ancient fathers, we see that the words, which were, do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use, and are as so many notes of remembrance unto us, that what they did signify in the letter, is accomplished in the truth. Hooker, b. iv.

A foundation, being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to an house, or other building, nor figurative, but what is founded in that, and deduced from thence. Hammond.

2. Following the letter, or exact words.

The fittest for public audience are such as, following a middle course between the rigour of literal translations and the liberty of paraphrase, do with greater shortness and plainness deliver the meaning. Hooker, b. v.

3. Consisting of letters; as, the literal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the cyphers.

LITERAL. n. f. Primitive or literal meaning.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions unto the people, and what absurd conceits they will swallow in their literals, an example we have in our profession. Brown's Vulg. Errors, b. iv.

LITERALLY. adv. [from literal.]

1. According to the primitive import of words; not figuratively.

That a man and his wife are one flesh, I can comprehend the meaning of; yet literally taken, it is a thing impossible. Swift.

2. With close adherence to words.

Endeavouring to turn his Nisus and Euryalus as close as I was able, I have performed that episode too literally; that giving more scope to Mezentius and Lausus, that version, which has more of the majesty of Virgil, has less of his conciseness. Dryden.

So wild and ungovernable a poet cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain. Dryden.

LITERALITY. n. f. [from literal.] Original meaning.

Not attaining the true deuterocopy and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superconsequences, coherence, figures, or tropologies, and are not literal. Brown.

If any loose liver have any goods of his own, the first is to seize thereupon. Spenser on Ireland.

Here are the wants of children, of distracted persons, of sturdy wandering beggars and loose disorderly livers, at one view represented. Atterbury.

3. [From liver, Saxon.] One of the entrails.

With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come;
And let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shakespeare.

Reason and respect
Make livers pale, and lividness dejected. Shakespeare.

LIVERCOLOUR, adj. [from live and colour.] Dark red.

The uppermost stratum is of gravel; then clay of various colours, purple, blue, red, livercolour. Woodward.

LIVERGROWN, adj. [from live and grown.] Having a great liver.

I inquired what other casualties was most like the rickets, and found that livergrown was nearest. Graunt.

LIVERWORT, n. f. [from live and wort.] A plant.

That sort of liverwort which is used to cure the bite of mad dogs, grows on commons, and open heaths, where the grass is short, on declivities, and on the sides of pits. This spreads spreads on the surface of the ground, and, when in perfection, is of an ash colour; but, as it grows old, it alters, and becomes of a dark colour.

LIV

LIVERY. n. f. [from livrer, French.]

1. The act of giving or taking possession.
You do wrongfully seize Hereford's right,
Call in his letters patents that he hath
By his attorneys general to sue
His livery, and deny his offered homage.

Shakep.

2. Release from wardship.
Had the two houses first sued out their livery, and once effectually redeemed themselves from the wardship of the tumults, I should then suspect my own judgment.
3. The state of being kept at a certain rate.

K. Charles.

What livery is, we by common use in England know well enough, namely, that it is an allowance of horse meat; as they commonly use the word stabling, as to keep horses at livery; the which word, I guess, is derived of livring or dehousing forth their nightly food; so in great houses, the livery is said to be served up for all night, that is, their evening allowance for drink; and livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears; so called, I suppose, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure: so it is apparent, that, by the word livery, is there meant horse meat, like as by the coinage is understood man's meat. Some say it is derived of coin, for that they used in their coinages not only to take meat but money; but I rather think it is derived of the Irish, the which is a common use amongst landlords of the Irish to have a common spending upon their tenants, who being commonly but tenants at will, they used to take of them what victuals they list; for of victuals they were wont to make a small reckoning.

Spenser on Ireland.

4. The cloaths given to servants.
My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears.
Perhaps they are by so much the more loth to forsake this argument, for that it hath, though nothing else, yet the name of scripture, to give it some kind of countenance more than the pretext of livery coats affordeth.

Hooker.

I think, it is our way,
If we will keep in favour with the king,
To be her men, and wear her livery.

Shakep. Rich. III.

Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery,
That see I by our faces.

Shakep. Timon of Athens.

Ev'ry lady cloth'd in white,
And crown'd with oak and laurel ev'ry knight,
Are servants to the leaf, by liversies known
Of innocence.

Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

On others int'rest her gay livery flings,
Int'rest that waves on party-colour'd wings;
Turn'd to the sun she casts a thousand dyes,
And as she turns the colours fall or rise.

Dunciad.

If your dinner miscarries, you were teased by the footmen coming into the kitchen; and to prove it true, throw a ladleful of broth on one or two of their liversies.

Swift.

5. A particular dress; a garb worn as a token or consequence of any thing.
Of fair Urania, fairer than a green,
Proudly bedeck'd in April's livery.

Sidney.

Mistake me not for my complexion
The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,
To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred.

Shakep.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Infect, or worm: those wad'd their limber fans,
For wings, and smallest lineaments exact,
In all the liversies deck'd of summer's pride,
With spots of gold and purple, azure, green.

Milton.

Now came full evening on, and twilight grey
Had in her sober livery all things clad.

Mil. Pa. Left.

LIVERYMAN. n. f. [livery and man.]
1. One who wears a livery; a servant of an inferior kind.
The witnesses made oath, that they had heard some of the liverymen frequently railing at their mistress.

Arbutnot.

2. [In London.] A freeman of some standing in a company.
LIVES. n. f. [the plural of life.]
So short is life, that every peasant strives,
In a farm house, or field, to have three lives.

Donne.

LIVID. adj. [lividus, Latin; livide, French.] Discoloured, as with a blow; black and blue.
It was a pestilent fever, not seated in the veins or humours, for that there followed no carbuncles, no purple or livid spots, the mafs of the blood not being tainted.

Bacon.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss!
They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,
Till they turn'd livid, and corrupt the snow.

Dryden.

LIVIDITY. n. f. [lividitas, French; from livid.] Discolouration, as by a blow.
The signs of a tendency to such a state, are darkness or lividity of the countenance.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

LIVING. n. f. [from live.]
1. Support; maintenance; fortune on which one lives.

LOA

The Arcadians fought as in unknown place, having no succour but in their hands; the Helots, as in their own place, fighting for their liversies, wives, and children.

Sidney.

All they did cast in all that she had, even all her living.
2. Power of continuing life.
There is no living without trusting some body or other, in some cases.

L. Esfrange's Fables.

2. Livelihood.
For ourselves we may a living make.
Then may I fet the world on wheels, when the can spin for her living.

Hubbard's Tale.

Isaac and his wife, now dig for your life,
Or shortly you'll dig for your living.
Actors must represent such things as they are capable to perform, and by which both they and the scribbler may get their living.

Denham.

3. Benefice of a clergyman.
Some of our ministers having the livings of the country offered unto them, without pains, will, neither for any love of God, nor for all the good they may do, by winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests.

Spenser.

The parson of the parish preaching against adultery, Mrs. Bull told her husband, that they would join to have him turned out of his living for using personal reflections.

Arbutnot.

LIVELY. adv. [from living.] In the living state.
In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who lively are cadaverous, or fear any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

LIVRE. n. f. [French.] The sum by which the French reckon their money, equal nearly to our shilling.
LIXIVIAL. adj. [from livivium, Latin.]
1. Impregnated with salts like a lixivium.

Boyle.

The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vitiated, were a yellowish colour of the skin, and a livial urine.
2. Obtained by lixivium.
Helmont conjectured, that livial salts do not pre-exist in their calcareous form.

Boyle.

LIXIVIALE. adj. [lixiviale, French; from livivium.] Making a lixivium.
In these the salt and livialized serosity, with some portion of choler, is divided between the guts and the bladder.

Boyle.

LIXIVUM. n. f. [Lat.] Lye; water impregnated with salt of whatsoever kind; a liquor which has the power of extraction.
I made a lixivium of fair water and salt of wormwood, and having frozen it with snow and salt, I could not discern any thing more like to wormwood than to several other plants.

Boyle.

LIZARD. n. f. [lizard, French; lacerta, Latin.] An animal resembling a serpent, with legs added to it.
There are several sorts of lizards; some in Arabia of a cubit long. In America they eat lizards; it is very probable likewise that they were eaten sometimes in Arabia and Judaea, since Moses ranks them among the unclean creatures.

Cabnet.

Thou'rt like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,
As venomous toads, or lizards dreadful stings.

Shakep.

LIZARD. n. f. [lizard and lizard.] A kind of stone.
LIZARDSTONE. n. f. [lizard and stone.] A kind of stone.
L.L.D. n. f. [legum doctor.] A doctor of the canon and civil laws.
Lo. interj. [la, Saxon.] Look; see; behold. It is a word used to recall the attention generally to some object of fight; sometimes to something heard, but not properly, often to something to be understood.

Shakep.

Lo! within a ken our army lies.
Now must the world point at poor Catharine,
And say, lo! there is mad Petruchio's wife.

Shakep.

Lo! I have a weapon,
A better never did itself sustain
Upon a soldier's thigh.

Shakep.

Lo! Thou did'st utter,
I am yours for ever.
—Why lo you now, I've spoke to the purpose twice.

Shak.

For lo! he sung the world's stupenduous birth.
Lo! heav'n and earth combine
To blast our bold design.

Dryden's Allum.

LOACH. n. f. [loche, French.]
The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the sharpest streams: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is suitable to that length: he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattels like a barbel: he has two fins at his sides, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots.

his

his mouth, barbel-like, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gelfer, and other learned physicians, commended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and is to be fished for with a very small worm, at the bottom, for he very seldom or never rises above the gravel.

Walton's Angler.

LOAD. n. f. [plase, Saxon.]
1. A burthen; a freight; lading.
Then on his back he laid the precious load,
And fought his wonted shelter.

Dryden's Nun's Tale.

2. Any thing that depresses.
How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unless he be very ignorant.

Ray on Creation.

3. As much drink as one can bear.
There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle.

L. Esfrange.

To LOAD. v. a. [laban, Saxon.]
1. To burden; to freight.
At last, laden with honour's spoils,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome.

Shakep.

2. To encumber; to embarrass.
He that makes no reflexions on what he reads, only loads his mind with a shapdoly of tales, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others.

Locke.

3. To charge a gun.
A mariner having discharged his gun, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire.

Wifeman.

4. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.
Thy dreadful vow, laden with death, still founds
In my tun'd ears.

Addison's Cato.

LOAD. n. f. [more properly lode, as it was anciently written from leasan, Saxon, to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.
The tin lay couched at first in certain strakes amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main lead spreadeth out his branches, until they approach the open air.

Cowley's Survey of Cornwall.

Their manner of working in the lead mines, is to follow the lead as it fleth.
LOAD. n. f. [from load.] He who loads.
LOADSMAN. n. f. [lade and man.] He who leads the way; a pilot.

Cowley's Survey of Cornwall.

LOADSTAR. n. f. [more properly as it is in Maundeville, lode-star, from leasan, to lead.] The polestar; the cynosure; the leading or guiding star.
She was the loadstar of my life; she the blessing of mine eyes; she the overthrow of my desires, and yet the recompence of my overthrow.

Sidney.

My Helice, the loadstar of my life.
O happy fair!
Your eyes are loadstars, and your tongue sweet air;
More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.

Shak.

Which standeth fix'd, yet spreads her heavenly worth,
Lodestone to hearts, and loadstar to all eyes.

Davies.

LOADSTONE. n. f. [properly lodestone or leading stone. See LOADSTAR.] The magnet; the stone on which the mariners compass needle is touched to give it a direction north and south.
The loadstone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large masses, of a deep iron-grey where fresh broken, and often tinged with a brownish or reddish colour: it is very heavy, and considerably hard, and its great character is that of affecting iron. This ore of iron is found in England, and in most other places where there are mines of that metal.

Hill's Materia Medica.

The use of the loadstone was kept as secret as any of the other mysteries of the art.
LOAF. n. f. [from blac or lap, Saxon.]
1. A mass of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.

Swift.

Easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive, we know.
The bread and bread corn in the town sufficed not for six days: hereupon the soldiers entered into proportion; and to give example, the lord Clinton limited himself to a loaf a day.

Shakep.

With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more
And less parts than a lump of lead of the same bigness.
Your wine becomes so limpid, that you may bottle it with a piece of loaf sugar in each bottle.

Digby.

LOAM. n. f. [lum, laam, Saxon; limus, Latin; from limen, a fen, Junius.] Fat, unctuous, tenacious, earth; marl.
The purest treasure

Is spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam or painted clay.

Shakep.

Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam; and why of that loam might they not stop a beer barrel?
To LOAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear with loam, marl, or clay; to clay.

Shakep.

The joist ends, and girders which be in the walls, must be loamed all over, to preserve them from the corroding of the mortar.
LOAMY. adj. [from loam.] Marly.
The mellow earth is the best, between the two extremes of clay and sand, especially if it be not loamy and binding.

Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 665.

Auricula seedlings best like a loamy sand, or light moist earth; yet rich and shaded.
LOAM. n. f. [lham, Saxon.] Any thing loamy; any thing given to another, on condition of return or repayment.
The better such ancient revenues shall be answered and paid, the less need her majesty ask subsidies, fifteens, and loans.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

You're on the fret,
Because, in so debauch'd and vile an age,
Thy friend and old acquaintance dares disown
The gold you lent him, and forswear the loan.

Dryden.

LOATH. adj. [lath, Saxon.] Unwilling; disliking; not ready; not inclined.
These fresh and delightful brooks, how slowly they slide away, as loth to leave the company of so many things united in perfection.

Sidney.

With lofty eyes, half loth to look so low,
She thanked them in her disdainful wife,
Ne other grace vouchsafed them to show
Of prince's worthy.

Fairy Queen, b. i.

When he heard her answers loth, he knew
Some secret sorrow did her heart distrain.
To speak so indirectly, I am loth;
I'd say the truth; but to accuse him so,
That is your part.

Fairy Queen.

Long doth she stay, as loth to leave the land,
From whose soft side the first did issue make,
She tastes all places, turns to ev'ry hand,
Her flow'ry banks unwilling to forsake.

Shakep. Meas. for Meas.

Then wilt thou not be loth
To leave this paradise, but shalt possess
A paradise within thee, happier far!

Milton's Par. Lost.

To pardon willing, and to punish loth;
You strike with one hand, but you heal with both:
Lifting up all that prostrate lie, you grieve
You cannot make the dead again to live.

Wallor.

When Aeneas is forced to kill Lausus, the poet shews him compassionate, and is loth to destroy such a master-piece of nature.
Then wilt thou not be loth
To leave this paradise, but shalt possess
A paradise within thee, happier far!

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

First views the torrent he would venture o'er;
And then his inn upon the farther ground,
Loth to wade through, and loth to go round:
Then dipping in his staff does trial make
How deep it is; and, fighting, pulls it back.

Dryden.

I know you fly to be oblig'd;
And still more loth to be oblig'd by me.
To LOATHE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To hate; to look on with abhorrence.

Southern.

Parthenia had learned both liking and misliking, loving and loathing.
They with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness.

Shakep.

2. To consider with the disgust of satiety.
The fish in the river shall die, and the river stink; and the Egyptians shall loath to drink of the water.

Exod. vii. 18.

How am I caught with an unwary oath,
Not to reveal the secret which I loath!
For thee the lion loaths the taste of blood,
And roaring hunts his female through the wood.

Waller.

Why do I stay within this hated place,
Where every object checks my loathing eyes.
Now his exalted spirit loaths
Incumbrances of food and cloaths.

Dryden.

3. To see food with dislike.
Loathing is a symptom well known to attend disorders of the stomach; and the cure must have regard to the cause.
To LOATHE. v. n. To create disgust; to cause abhorrence.
Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toadpool grown there might I see,
And loathing paddocks lording on the same.

Spenser.

LOB

LO'ATHER. n. f. [from leath.] One that loaths.

LO'ATHFUL. adj. [from leath and full.]

1. Abhorring; hating.

Which he did with leathful eyes behold.
He would no more endure. Hubbard's Tale.

2. Abhorred; hated.

Above the reach of leathful sinful lust,
Whose bale effect, through cowardly distrust
Of his weak wings, dare not to heaven flee. Spenser.

LO'ATHINGLY. adv. [from leath.] In a fastidious manner.

LO'ATHLY. adj. [from leath.] Hatelul; abhorred; exciting hatred.

An huge great dragon, horrible in fight,
Bred in the leathly lakes of Tartary,
With murder ravin. Fairy Queen, b. i.

The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs, and leathly births of nature. Shakespeare.

Sour-eyed children, and discord shall bestow
The union of your bed with weeds to leathly,
That you shall hate it. Shakespeare's Tempest.

LO'ATHLY. adv. [from leath.] Unwillingly; without liking or inclination.

The upper streams make such haste to have their part of embracing, that the nether, though leathly, must needs give place unto them. Sidney.

Leathly opposite I stood
To his unnatural purpose. Shakespeare's King Lear.

This shews that you from nature leathly stray,
That suffer not an artificial day. Donne.

LO'ATHNESS. n. f. [from leath.] Unwillingness.

The fair soul herself
Weigh'd between leathness and obedience,
Which end the beam should bow. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Pray you, look not sad,
Nor make replies of leathness. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

Should we be taking leave,
As long a time as yet we have to live,
The leathness to depart would grow. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

After they had sat about the fire, there grew a general silence and leathness to speak amongst them; and immediately one of the weakest fell down in a swoon. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

LO'ATHSOME. adj. [from leath.]

1. Abhorred; detestable.

The fresh young fly
Did much disdain to subject his desire
To leathsome loth, or hours in case to waste. Spenser.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To leathsome sickness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

If we consider man in such a leathsome and provoking condition, was it not love enough that he was permitted to enjoy a being. South's Sermons.

2. Causing satiety or fastidiousness.

The sweetest honey
Is leathsome in its own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite. Shakespeare.

LO'ATHSOMENESS. n. f. [from leathsome.] Quality of raising hatred.

The catacombs must have been full of stench and leathsome-ness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches. Addison.

LOAVES, plural of loaf.

Democritus, when he lay a dying, caused leaves of new bread to be opened, and he poured a little wine into them; and so kept himself alive with the odour till a feast was past. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 934.

LOB. n. f.

To LOB. v. a. To let fall in a slovenly or lazy manner.

The horsemen fit like fixed candlesticks,
And their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips. Shakespeare.

LOBBY. n. f. [laube, German.] An opening before a room.

His lobbies fill with 'tendance,
Rain sacrificial whirrings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakespeare's Tim. of Athens.

Before the duke's rising from the table, he stood expecting till he should pass through a kind of lobby between that room and the next, where were divers attending him. Watson.

Try your back flairs, and let the lobby wait.
A stratagem in war is no deceit. King's Horace.

LOBE. n. f. [lobes, French; lobes, Latin.] A division; a distinct part; used commonly for a part of the lungs.

LOC

Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell
To that prodigious mass, for their eternal meal. Dryden.

Air bladders form lobuli, which hang upon the bronchia like bunches of grapes; these lobuli constitute the lobes, and the lobes the lungs. Arbutnot on Aliments.

LO'NSTER. n. f. [lobrester, Saxon.] A crustaceous fish.

Those that cast their shells, are the lobsters, the crab, and craw-fish. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 732.

LOCAL. adj. [local, French; locus, Latin.]

1. Having the properties of place.

By ascending, after that the sharpness of death was overcome, he took the very local position of glory, and that to the use of all that are his, even as himself before had witnessed, I go to prepare a place for you. Hosker, b. v.

A higher fight the venturous goddess tries,
Leaving material worlds, and local skies. Prior.

2. Relating to place.

The circumstance of local nearness in them unto us, might happily enforce in us a duty of greater separation from them than from those other. Hosker, b. iv.

Where there is only a local circumstance of worship, the same thing would be worshipped, supposing that circumstance changed. Stillingsfleet.

3. Being in a particular place.

Dream not of their fight,
As of a duel, or the local wounds
Of head, or heel. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xiii.

How is the change of being sometimes here, sometimes there, made by local motion in vacuum, without a change in the body moved? Digby on Bodies.

LOCALITY. n. f. [from local.] Existence in place; relation of place, or distance.

That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, and that they have nothing to do with grosser locality, is generally opinioned. Glanville's Scip.

LOCALITY. adj. [from local.] With respect to place.

Whether things, in their natures so divers as body and spirit, which almost in nothing communicate, are not essentially divided, though not locally distant, I leave to the readers. Glanville's Scip.

LOCATION. n. f. [locatio, Latin.] Situation with respect to place; act of placing; state of being placed.

To say that the world is somewhere, means no more than that it does exist; this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location. Locke.

LOCH. n. f. A lake. Scottish.

A lake or loch, that has no fresh water running into it, will turn into a stinking puddle. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.

LOCK. n. f. [lock, Saxon, in both senses.]

8. To lay flat.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,
Though castles topple on their warders heads. Shakespeare.

We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a dearth in this revolting land. Shakespeare's

To LODGE. v. n.

1. To reside; to keep residence.

Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye,
And where care lodges, sleep will never lie. Shakespeare.

Something holy lodges in that breast,
And with these raptures moves the vocal air
To testify his hidden residence. Milton.

And dwells such rage in softest bosom then?
And lodges such daring souls in little men? Pope.

2. To take a temporary habitation.

Why commands the king,
That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,
While he himself keepeth in the cold field? Shakespeare.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakespeare's Othello.

Thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people. 2 Sam. xvii. 8.

3. To take up residence at night.

My lords
And soldiers, stay and lodge by me this night. Shakespeare.

LOG

And hollow'd first a floating trough became, And cross some riv'let passage did begin. *Dryden.*The log in secret lock'd. *Dryden's Ovid.*2. An Hebrew measure, which held a quarter of a cab, and consequently five-sixths of a pint. According to Dr. Arbuthnot it was a liquid measure, the seventy-second part of the bath or ephah, and twelfth part of the hin. *Cabnet.*A meat offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil. *Lev. xiv. 10.*LOGARITHMS. n. f. [logarithmus, Fr. loge, and logos.]

Logarithms, which are the indexes of the ratios of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier lord Merchiston, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr. Briggs, Savilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of artificial numbers, contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proportion, as the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical one: for instance,

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8

Where the numbers above, beginning with (0), and arithmetically proportional, are called logarithms. The addition and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and this saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by difficking the logarithms of any numbers for the square root, and tripling them for the cube, and so on. *Harris.*LOGGERS. *n. f.*Loggers is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unlawful games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the same which is now called kitlepins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling. *Hammer.*Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggers with them. *Shakespeare's Hamlet.*LOGGERS. n. f. [loggers, Dutch, stupid and head, or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blockhead.] A dolt; a blockhead; a thickskull.Where halt been, Hal? With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or four score hogheads. *Shakespeare's Henry IV.*Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other peoples fires. LeStrange.

To fall to LOGGERHEADS. } To scuffle; to fight without weapons. } To go to LOGGERHEADS. } pons.

 If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination which keeps us from chusing the worse, be liberty, madmen and fools are only the free-men. Locke.

15. To break loose. To gain liberty.
 Like two black storms on either hand,
 Our Spanish army and the Indians stand;
 This only space betwixt the clouds is clear,
 Where you, like day, broke loose from both appear. Dryd.

16. To let loose. To let at liberty; to let at large; to free from any restraint.
 And let the living bird loose into the open field. Lev. xiv. 7.
 We ourselves make our fortunes good or bad; and when God lets loose a tyrant upon us, or a sickness, if we fear to die, or know not to be patient, the calamity fits heavy upon us. Taylor's holy Living.

In addition and division, either of space or duration, it is the number of its repeated additions or divisions that alone remains distinct, as will appear to any one who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expansion of space, or divisibility of matter. Locke.

LOO

If one way of improvement cannot be made a recreation, they must be let loose to the childish play they fancy; which they should be weaned from, by being made fast of it. Locke on Education.

LOOSE. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Liberty; freedom from restraint.
 Come, and forsake thy cloying store,
 And all the busy pageantry
 That wife men scorn, and fools adore:
